PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 81st CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, April 11, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, unto our keeping Thou hast committed a national heritage luminous with freedom's glorious light. For all the glory which is America, we bless Thy name. For borders without guns, for frontiers which are swinging gates, for unity in diversity, for peace which spans a continent, and for the equality which beckons all to the summits. In this day of destiny for us and for the world, may we be worthy of our high calling as keepers of the sacred flame. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"House Concurrent Resolution 26

"Concurrent resolution making application to the Congress of the United States in the calling of a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States

"Whereas article V of the Constitution of the United States reads in part as follows: 'The Congress * * * on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States * * *'; and

"Whereas the Legislature of the State of Michigan, in view of the increasing tax problems of the State, caused in large part by the invasion of tax sources by the Federal Government, believes that its problems as well as the problems of other States similarly situated, can be solved only by some restraint upon present unrestrained exercise of the taxing power by the Federal Government; and

"Whereas the Federal Government is using and has been using for a number of years the taxing power to produce revenue beyond a legitimate necessity of a Federal Government, other than defense needs, and has been using the funds so raised to invade the province of legislation of the States and to appropriate in many fields that which amounts to a dole to the States of the money raised therefrom to accomplish many purposes, most of them worthy, but by the described process making the money available only under conditions which result in a control by the Federal Government from centralized agencies in Washington, in many cases unfit, and in other cases unable to administer the laws according to the local needs because of varying conditions in the country as a whole; resulting in inequities in the administration of the very benefits purported to be granted; and

"Whereas State and local needs are disadvantaged because the people are already taxed far beyond the real need for any purpose other than forcing the centralization of all government in Washington; and

"Whereas the framers of the Constitution of the United States clearly foresaw the possibility of a condition similar to that herein described, and made provision in the Constitution for safeguarding the States against any oppression or invasion of rights by the Federal Government: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Michigan, That said legislature, hereby and pursuant to article V of the Constitution of the United States, makes application to the Congress of the United States to call a convention for the proposing of the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

"'ARTICLE—

"'SECTION 1. The power to levy taxes and appropriate the revenues therefrom heretofore granted to the Congress by the States in the several articles of this Constitution is hereby limited.

"'SEC. 2. This article shall be in effect except during a state of war, hereafter declared, when it shall be suspended. The suspension thereof shall end upon the termination of the war but not later than 3 months after the cessation of hostilities, whichever shall be earlier. The cessation of hostilities may be declared by proclamation of the President or by concurrent resolution of the Congress or by concurrent action of the legislatures of 32 States.

"'SEC. 3. Notwithstanding the provisions of article V, this article may be suspended for a time certain or amended at any time by concurrent action of the legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

"'SEC. 4. There shall be set aside in the Treasury of the United States a separate fund into which shall be paid 25 percent of all taxes collected by authority derived from the sixteenth amendment to this constitution, except as provided in section 5, and 25 percent of all sums collected by the United States from any other tax levied for revenue.

"'SEC. 5. There shall be set aside in the Treasury of the United States a separate fund into which shall be paid all sums received from taxes levied on personal incomes in excess of 50 percent thereof and from taxes levied on income or profits of corporations in excess of 38 percent thereof.

"'SEC. 6. Before paying any sums into the funds created by sections 4 and 5 hereof, the Treasurer of the United States shall deduct therefrom 20 percent which shall be used in payment of the principal of the national debt of the United States.

"'SEC. 7. No tax shall hereafter be imposed on that portion of the incomes of individuals which does not exceed, in the case of unmarried persons the sum of $600 per annum, and in the case of married persons the sum of $1,200 per annum jointly. A minimum deduction of $600 per annum shall be allowed for each dependent.

"'SEC. 8. The Treasurer of the United States shall once in each year, from the separate fund created by section 4 hereof, pay to each of the several States one-fourth of 1 percent of said fund and from the remainder of said fund shall pay to each State a portion of such remainder determined by the population of each State in ratio to the entire population of the several States according to the last Federal decennial census or any subsequent general census authorized by law.

"'SEC. 9. The Treasurer of the United States shall, from the separate fund created by section 5 hereof, pay to each State, once in each year, a sum equal to the amount of money in such fund which was collected from persons or corporations within such State.

"'SEC. 10. Any sums paid hereunder to the several States shall be available for appropriation only by the legislatures thereof. The legislatures may appropriate therefrom for any purpose not forbidden by the constitutions of the respective States and may appropriate therefrom for expenditures within the States for any purpose for which appropriations have heretofore been made by the Congress except such purposes as are specifically reserved by this constitution for the exclusive power of the Congress. The people of each State may limit the expenditures of funds herein made available to the legislature, but shall not direct the appropriation thereof.

"'SEC. 11. Each legislature shall have power by rule or resolution to provide for the assembly thereof in special sessions for the purpose of considering amendments to, the suspension of, or the ratification of amendments proposed to this article.

"'SEC. 12. Each legislature shall have power to elect one or more persons to represent such legislature in any council or convention of States created by concurrent action of the legislatures of 32 States for the purpose of obtaining uniform action by the legislatures of the several States in any matters connected with the amendment of this article.

"'SEC. 13. The Congress shall not create, admit, or form new States from the Territory of the several States as constituted on the 1st day of January 1949, and shall not create, form, or admit more than three States from the Territories and insular possessions under the jurisdiction of the United States on the 1st day of January 1949 or from Territory thereafter acquired without the express consent of the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States.

" 'SEC. 14. On and after January 1, 1949, the dollar shall be the unit of the currency. The gold content of the dollar as fixed on January 1, 1949, shall not be decreased.

" 'SEC. 15. Concurrent action of the legislatures of the several States as used herein shall mean the adoption of the same resolution by the required number of legislatures. A limit of time may be fixed by such resolution within which such concurrent action shall be taken. No legislature shall revoke the affirmative action of a preceding legislature taken therein.

" 'SEC. 16. During any period when this article is in effect the Congress may, by concurrent resolution adopted by two-thirds of both Houses wherein declaration is made that additional funds are necessary for the defense of the Nation, limit the amount of money required by this article to be returned to the several States. Such limitation shall continue until terminated by the Congress or by concurrent action of a majority of the legislatures of the several States. Upon termination of any such limitation the Congress may not thereafter impose a limitation without the express consent by concurrent action of a majority of the legislatures of the several States.

" 'SEC. 17. This article is declared to be self-executing'; and be it further

"Resolved, That attested copies of this concurrent resolution be sent to the Presiding Officers of each House of the Congress and to each Member of the Michigan delegation in Congress, and that printed copies thereof, showing that said concurrent resolution was adopted by the Legislature of Michigan, be sent to each house of each legislature of each State of the United States; and be it further

"Resolved, That this application hereby made by the Legislature of the State of Michigan shall constitute a continuing application in accordance with article V of the Constitution of the United States until at least two-thirds of the legislatures of the several States shall have made similar applications pursuant to said article V; and be it further

"Resolved, That since this is an exercise by a State of the United States of a power granted to it under the Constitution, the request is hereby made that the official Journals and RECORD of both Houses of Congress shall include the resolution or a notice of its receipt by the Congress, together with similar applications from other States, so that the Congress and the various States shall be apprised of the time when the necessary number of States shall have so exercised their power under article V of the Constitution; and be it further

"Resolved, That since this method of proposing amendments to the Constitution has never been completed to the point of calling a convention and no interpretation of the power of the States in the exercise of this right has ever been made by any court or any qualified tribunal, if there be such, and since the exercise of the power is a matter of basic sovereign rights and the interpretation thereof is primarily in the sovereign government making such exercise and since the power to use such right in full also carries the power to use such right in part the Legislature of the State of Michigan interprets article V to mean that if two-thirds of the States make application for a convention to propose an identical amendment to the Constitution for ratification with a limitation that such amendment be the only matter before it, that such convention would have power only to propose the specified amendment and would be limited to such proposal and would not have power to vary the text thereof nor would it have power to propose other amendments on the same or different propositions; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Michigan does not, by this exercise of its power under article V, authorize the Congress to call a convention for any purpose other than the proposing of the specific amendment which is a part hereof; nor does it authorize any representative of the State of Michigan who may participate in such convention to consider or to agree to the proposing of any amendment other than the one made a part hereof; and be it further

"Resolved, That by its actions in these premises, the Legislature of the State of Michigan does not in any way limit in any other proceeding its right to exercise its power to the full extent; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Congress, in exercising its power of decision as to the method of ratification of the proposed article by the legislatures or by conventions, is hereby requested to require that the ratification be by the legislatures."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"House Joint Memorial 20

"To the President and Congress of the United States; the Secretary of the Interior; the Fish and Wildlife Service; and the Delegate from Alaska:

"Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in nineteenth regular session assembled, espectfully submits:

"Whereas it is realized that Alaska's fur animals and game animals and noncommercial fish represent a unique and irreplaceable wildlife resource upon which a large part of our population is dependent for existence and which concerns every one in Alaska; and

"Whereas, the resource value of these assets, at present-day prices, may be conservatively estimated at $150,000,000 and the Territory's fur bearers are the only source of revenue in a large portion of Alaska; and

"Whereas, an alarming and persistent depletion of some of these wildlife species is occurring as the result of not only the obvious factors of predation, increased hunting pressure, etc., but also of certain unknown factors which can be discovered only through scientific investigations; and

"Whereas the Cooperative Wildlife Research Units now active at land-grant colleges in 14 States have, during the last 13 years, with a comparatively small investment, been highly successful in developing practical scientific answers to problems in wildlife management, have trained many young men to assume positions of responsibility in the field of wildlife conservation, have provided public education and guidance in this field, and have rendered continuing technical assistance to State game departments in their wildlife management problems; and

"Whereas the people of the Territory of Alaska keenly feel the need for, and greatly desire the establishment of, a Cooperative Wildlife Research Unit at the University of Alaska to accomplish these objectives in the Territory; and

"Whereas the Territory of Alaska and the Wildlife Management Institute are contributing their share toward the establishment of this unit:

"Now, therefore, your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, urges that Federal funds be made available in the amount necessary to aid in establishing the proposed Cooperative Wildlife Research Unit at the University of Alaska.

"And your memorialist will ever pray."

MISSOURI RIVER AUTHORITY—EDITORIAL AND RESOLUTION

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I submit for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, an editorial and a resolution adopted by the Community Club of the city of Chamberlain, S. Dak., dealing with the Missouri Valley Authority.

There being no objection, the editorial and resolution were referred to the Committee on Public Works, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AFL COUNCIL ON MISSOURI VALLEY DEVELOPMENT PLEDGE MVA SUPPORT—DISPROVE UTILITY PROPAGANDA IN IMPORTANT MOVE TO BRING AREA PROSPERITY

Joining the growing ranks of folks in the Missouri River Basin who want this area developed according to sound principles, delegates to the important Missouri Valley Development Trades and Labor Council, AFL, voted approval of the Missouri Valley Administration last week.

Meeting in Sioux Falls, S. Dak., delegates to the council—which represents AFL groups in 10 States—gave the nod to a resolution which protested the difficulty and lack of success in dealing with numerous bureaus and divided authority under the Pick-Sloan plan.

Attending the meeting from Sioux City were Floyd T. Smith, business representative of the machinists union here and past president of the local trades and labor assembly; Clarence Fulton, of the carpenters union, present president of the assembly; Earl Stevens, of the building trades council; and Joe Snodgrass, of the plumbers, steamfitters union No. 18.

SIGNIFICANT MOVE

The labor group's move is decidedly significant in view of the pressure which has been exerted by private utilities to suppress any demonstration of MVA support. One of the utility's main war cries has been that no one in the valley wants MVA.

These delegates to the Missouri Valley Development Trades and Labor Council proved the utility propaganda—to be charitable—incorrect.

The council represents thousands upon thousands of AFL members in the following States: Iowa, Minnesota, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Wyoming, North and South Dakota.

The resolution adopted by the council delegates is printed below:

"Resolution in favor of S. 1160, Missouri Valley Authority

"Whereas during the past several years, the Missouri Valley Development Trades and Labor Council has, from time to time, discussed the question of the so-called Pick-Sloan plan versus a Missouri Valley plan similar to the Tennessee Valley Authority; and

"Whereas up to the present time we have been primarily interested in the development of the basin and, therefore, have not pushed the question as to what set-up or plan under which the development should be carried out; and

"Whereas on March 2, 1949, the honorable Senators MURRAY from Montana, GILLETTE from Iowa, and HUMPHREY from Minnesota, saw fit to introduce S. 1160 which provides for a Missouri Valley Authority along the pattern of the Tennessee Valley Authority; and

"Whereas Senator HUMPHREY so ably pointed out the shortcomings of the Pick-Sloan plan both in its planning and the management thereof; and

"Whereas we have experienced great expense and difficulty and not much success in dealing with the numerous bureaus and divided authority which exists under the present set-up; and

"Whereas dealing with a centralized management would simplify the establishment of uniform conditions for all the different projects in the valley: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this conference go on record in favor of S. 1160 as introduced in the Senate on March 2, 1949, by the above-mentioned Senators, and that we do everything possible to have said bill enacted into law; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, and to the Senators and Congressmen representing the 10 States included in the Missouri Valley Basin; and to all building trades councils."

Whereas it is becoming more apparent every day to the residents and citizens of Chamberlain that the Pick-Sloan plan for the development of the Missouri River Basin—

1. Provides inadequate safeguards for our health in that the Hoover Commission reports that they have failed to consider the insanitary conditions that may prevail in the portions uncovered at low levels;

2. Threatens our only adequate natural recreational facilities in this section of the State in that the soil and vegetation on American Island cannot be duplicated in this area;

3. Threatens to lower property valuation of that property alongside future muddy and unhealthy areas without compensation therefor when the land is not condemned;

4. Appears to provide safeguards for land in States to the south at a sacrifice of our richest agricultural land in this sector of the State;

5. Fails to provide for water transportation to the area of possible manganese developments and, in fact, will cut off any possible water transportation to our State except for the extreme southeast corner;

6. Will, by virtue of the high head dam, effect a removal of much of the property on the tax lists at the present time with an increased burden cast on the other property within the county;

7. Appears in general to be an over-all detriment and not a benefit to this section of the State; and

Whereas the attitude of cooperation on the part of the present agencies has incurred the displeasure of the landowners and the other property owners in this area and has been poorly displayed and the community's attempts to secure modifications of the present plans; and

Whereas the press and various organizations within this State have indicated that there is little demand for a change in the present plans or in support of the MVA:

We of the Community Club of the City of Chamberlain, S. Dak., do hereby resolve to express our unified opposition to the continuance of any plan for development which will continue the seven objections in the first paragraph hereof and will permit a fluctuation of as great an amount as 65 feet in the water level which at high stage will flood a sizable portion of our city and at low level permit the vast expanse of mud and disease-producing putrid pools which appears the natural result of a continuation of the Pick-Sloan plan.

We ask specifically that further development of the basin as a whole as distinguished from individual construction projects be removed from the control of the Army engineers.

We hereby place ourselves on record as a group as resolved in favor of an MVA as being the only feasible alternative presented for the Pick-Sloan plan to date. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the two Senators and the two Members of Congress from South Dakota, a copy to the Senators from Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, Montana, and Wyoming, and that a copy be sent to the President of the United States with the express wish that a low head dam be established in lieu of the present one planned at Fort Randall, and that, at the very least, the recommendations of the Hoover Commission for the improvement of the present plan be adopted immediately.

GLEN GRIFFITH,
President.
LAUREL E. PEASE,
Secretary.

INCREASE IN CERTAIN POSTAL RATES—COMMUNICATIONS AND EDITORIALS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, one of the important issues facing the Senate and House is presented in the postage rate increase legislation now pending before both bodies. It has become quite clear in the course of the testimony heard on these measures that their net effect would be to do incalculable harm to many areas of American life. It has been pointed out how harmful the present drastic bills would be to our weekly newspapers, to business advertising, and so on. One of the features with which I am particularly concerned is that these bills would do severe damage to America's religious press—both religious magazines and religious books. In addition, many fraternal organizations, unions, and other groups would be similarly hard hit.

As an indication of the grass roots thinking on this important subject, I have before me several communications from my own State. Undoubtedly, they are similar to many of the other informative statements which my colleagues have received. I, for one, of course, oppose the postage rate increase legislation in its present form.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the communications, together with a forthright editorial from the La Crosse edition of the noted Catholic newspaper The Register be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communications and editorial were referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BPOE,
WATERTOWN LODGE, No. 666,
Watertown, Wis., April 14, 1949.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: After a communication in regard to a proposed bill S. 1103 was read at our meeting last night, the members voted to adopt the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Watertown Lodge No. 666 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks is definitely opposed to any material increase in the postal rates of the Elks magazine as incorporated in S. 1103;

"That this lodge is opposed to having the privileges it now enjoys from this nonprofit publication being taken away; and

"That, should the bill be enacted into law, we would hate to have the grand lodge curtail or even cease many of its worth-while features; and

"That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Congressman and Senators of this district."

Hoping that you will use your best judgment when this bill comes up for consideration, I am

Very truly yours,
Dr. R. V. HARTE, Secretary.

FRATERNAL ORDER OF EAGLES,
MANITOWOC AERIE, NO. 706,
Manitowoc, Wis., April 5, 1949.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WILEY: The Fraternal Order of Eagles of Manitowoc, No. 706, would like to have you consider bill H. R. 2945. We feel that if this bill would be passed it would, over the course of a year, cost us a considerable amount of money.

We are now spending between $30 and $40 a month in mailing to our members the news and ideas of our order, and a raise in postal rates would probably make the aerie try to save the rise in rates and the members would not receive the information they are entitled to.

Thank you.

Very truly yours,
JACOB L. STUEBER,
Secretary.

ST. MARY'S SPRINGS ACADEMY,
Fond du Lac, Wis., March 18, 1949.

Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: Before you now is bill S. 1103, a bill which would increase the postage rates on books.

If the evils of our times are ever to be corrected, we must be interested in the education of our people. Books are necessary tools of education. To increase rates on them is to penalize those who are making the greatest contribution to our culture. The principle involved sets us down as a Nation ready to sacrifice mental and spiritual values for material ones.

Since this is the fourth time in 7 years that books have been considered subject to increased postage rates, we believe that it is time for the voice of the people to be heard. Therefore, we protest most heartily against bill S. 1103, a bill which would increase the postage rates on books.

Yours very truly,
SISTER M. EMMA,
Principal.
(And sundry other members of the faculty.)

UNITED AUTOMOBILE, AIRCRAFT, AGRICULTURE IMPLEMENT WORKERS OF AMERICA (UAW-CIO), Milwaukee, Wis., April 19, 1949.

Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Building,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: Members of Auxiliary 2, UAW-CIO, are very much concerned about the bills H. R. 2945 and S. 1103. It is our opinion that these bills, if enacted, would cause the elimination of publications now published by churches, unions and other small organizations. We do not believe such publications could stand the increased mailing costs that would be necessary under the provisions of these bills.

Therefore, we hereby respectfully request that you use the influence of your good office in an endeavor to defeat these bills at such time as either of them may be presented to your House of Congress for consideration.

Yours truly,

JEANNETTA KEIM,
Recording Secretary, Women's Auxiliary No. 2, UAW-CIO.

[From the La Crosse (Wis.) edition of the Register]

WHAT OF INCREASED POSTAL RATES?

At present a bill is pending in congressional committee—H. R. 2945 and S. 1103—that for the sake of America's future security let's pray will die there and never be resurrected. It is a bill that would boost postal rates for all second-class matter to fantastic heights. We now feel quite certain that this bill will never become law. In studying the members of the Senate and House Post Office Committees, we note there are many level-headed legislators on both committees who see through the allurement of increased revenue for the Post Office to the devastating effects such a bill would have on America's well-being and life. We like to think, even though this proposal was repeatedly made in the past and never was successful, this latest bill again was a hasty move on the part of its originators who did not realize fully the disastrous results it would have.

Of course, this bill would affect all newspapers that reach their subscribers by mail. That includes practically all the religious press, Protestant, Jewish, and Catholic, as few of them have newsboy service, but use the mails from necessity since most are weekly publications. For some religious publications—the majority—this bill would be fatal—they could not stand up under the staggering increased costs. For all, it would mean that the subscribers would have to foot the bill that would increase postal rates up to 400 percent. The La Crosse Register as it is will be forced soon to increase its subscription rates—a move long delayed, but a move made imperative by a 100-percent rise in publication costs since 1940. But should this bill go through, an additional $1 increase in the subscription rate besides the raise already planned would have to go into effect. Otherwise your paper would go bankrupt overnight. What holds for the La Crosse Register is equally true of the other 400 Catholic, 400 Protestant, and 200 Jewish publications in this country.

This measure is being opposed almost universally by the American free press. True, there are the few, prompted by selfish motives (for their papers are delivered almost exclusively by carrier service), who favor the proposed measure. Not too strangely, such publications favoring the measure are those whose journalistic record has been anything but American. They surmise this bill would remove from the field of free competition the publications that still uphold the laws of morality and the sacred rights upon which this country is founded, and that ceaselessly carry on a noble fight against communism or any other force that is a danger to the American way of life and the basic rights of man.

The United States Post Office from its inception was never intended to be a money-making enterprise, no more than the Library of Congress was. It was meant to be a subsidy. It was meant to be the best security for a free America, for it would make an enlightened America. A democracy thrives on a free press. The Post Office, as ordained by its founders, brings into reality a free press that is enabled to spread the Government's message of truth and liberty to people the country over. From the records, what phase of America's press has done a nobler job in this respect than the religious press, whose aim is not profit but to disseminate truth and the great principles of morality? In those hard years when it was not popular to oppose the now world-wide menace, communism, when many publications practically were fellow travelers, the Catholic press fought the fight single-handed. The heart of the American press is the religious press—never advocating anything un-American, ever prompting loyalty to God and country, and to movements that lead to that goal. Readers are urged to watch carefully legislative moves of this type that are real and imminent threats to America's religious press and to express their disapproval of any such bill by writing to their Congressmen.

ADDITIONAL BENEFITS FOR CERTAIN POSTMASTERS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide additional benefits for certain postmasters, and so forth. I particularly invite any other Senators who care to join as cosponsors in the introduction of the bill to add their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 1772) to provide additional benefits for certain postmasters, officers, and employees in the postal field service with respect to annual and sick leave, longevity pay, compensatory time, and promotion, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

SUPPLEMENTAL RESERVE REQUIREMENTS FOR INSURED BANKS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for supplemental reserve requirements for insured banks, and for other purposes.

I might say that the bill calls for the continuation under permanent authority of the temporary power the Federal Reserve Board now possesses but which expires on June 30, 1949, to require member banks to maintain additional reserves of 4 percent on demand deposits and 1½ percent on time deposits. It also extends the same authority to increase reserve requirements to nonmember insured banks, provided that the maximum reserve requirements for member banks under the permanent reserve requirements of the Federal Reserve Act are in effect.

I wish to say further that a request was made that the bill should permit the Board to increase reserve requirements by 10 percent for demand deposits and 4 percent for time deposits, but after many conferences between Federal Reserve Board officials, particularly the Chairman, Mr. McCabe, and the chairman of the subcommittee on Federal Reserve matters of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], we came to the conclusion that it was best at this time, with conditions as they are, to leave reserve ratios in the law as they are at present.

No doubt there are some sections of the bill which probably are controversial. Speaking for the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], with whom I have just conferred, I may say that he expects to start hearings, inviting bankers and other interested persons throughout the United States, on or around May 15. I make this statement so that it will appear in the RECORD, and so that it will be generally known that the hearings on the Federal Reserve System will commence in the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency presided over by the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] around May 15.

The bill (S. 1775) to provide for supplemental reserve requirements for insured banks, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. Maybank, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL HOUSING ACT—AMENDMENT

Mr. THYE (for himself, Mr. BALDWIN, and Mr. IVES) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (S. 712) to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF CONTRACT SETTLEMENT ACT OF 1944—AMENDMENTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 528) to amend the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 so as to authorize the payment of fair compensation to persons contracting to deliver certain strategic or critical minerals or metals in cases of failure to recover reasonable costs, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SUSPENSION OF LEGISLATIVE BUDGET—AMENDMENT

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, earlier today the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], from the Committee on Rules and Administration, reported Senate Concurrent Resolution 33, suspending the legislative budget pending further study, and it was placed on the Calendar. I now submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by me to the concurrent resolution, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table. I intend to submit my substitute when the concurrent resolution is taken up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

COMMEMORATION OF POLAND'S NATIONAL DAY

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD the statement I have prepared relating to the commemoration of Poland's National Day.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We are happy to commemorate Poland's National Day, the anniversary of the birth of the democratic constitution, enacted by the Polish Parliament on May 3, 1791. The constitution states that: "All power in civil society is derived from the will of the people." It is the first truly democratic constitution in Europe and a milestone in the development of parliamentary democracy.

The constitution was adopted at a time when Poland was surrounded by the autocratic states of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, and already partitioned once by her aggressive neighbors (in 1772). The enactment of the constitution did not save Poland from further aggression; to the contrary, the totalitarian rulers of the neighbor states hurriedly completed the conquest. Afraid that the Polish democratic principles might contaminate their own subjects, the Empress of Russia, and the rulers of Prussia and Austria, ordered their troops to march into Poland in 1793 (second partition), and in 1795 (third and final partition).

Thus, Poland lost her independence for 123 years. She was restored again as a free and independent state in 1918, when the signatories of the Versailles Treaty adopted the thirteenth point of the declaration by President Woodrow Wilson providing for the reestablishment of a free Polish state with access to the sea.

The similarity of events during that period and the present one is truly astounding. Then as now a handful of quislings and foreigners were imposed upon the people of Poland as their Government, and the true Polish leaders were declared unrepresentative of their people. Ambassador Philip Mazzei wrote on May 23, 1792, to Thomas Jefferson: "The Empress of Russia had ordered her troops to enter Poland in order to assist the nation in reestablishing its Government. * * * The shameless and provoking insolence of that declaration has exasperated us. * * * She (the Empress) pretends that the nation consists of 11 refugees who are now in St. Petersburg, and that the King and the Diet who have enacted the constitution, and all the citizens of the kingdom are nothing more than a handful of factionists."

After a short period of independence (1918–39), Poland was partitioned again as the result of an aggression by Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia. Poland was the first to accept the challenge of Hitler and the first nation to resist with arms the onslaught of the Nazi war machine. President Roosevelt called Poland "the inspiration of nations."

Under the Nazi occupation, the Poles formed a complete underground state consisting of a government, parliament, judiciary, and an army of 300,000 men. At the same time, a government was functioning in exile (London) and an army of 200,000 men was organized abroad. This army fought side by side with its American and British allies on all battlefields of Europe and Africa.

In spite of this magnificent war effort, Poland did not regain her independence after the termination of hostilities in 1945. As a result of the Yalta Conference in February 1945, half of Polish territory was given to Russia, the legal Polish Government in London was abandoned, and a handful of Russians and Quislings were imported from Moscow to serve as the Polish Government in Warsaw.

At present Poland is a Soviet-occupied country and her Government serves the interests of Russia and international communism. The most recent proof of the true nature of the Government in Warsaw was presented in the documentary evidence given by a Polish general on March 31, 1949, before the House Un-American Activities Committee. It was proved conclusively during this hearing that the Warsaw Government organized in the United States an espionage net directed against the security of this country.

But, fortunately, the American people are aware that the people of Poland cannot be blamed for the activities of a government which was imposed upon them against their will and of which they strongly disapprove. President Truman made this clear when he told the new Polish envoy on February 5, 1947, that he realized the difference between the Polish people and the totalitarian government.

At present a momentous struggle is in progress in Poland, separated from the western world by an impenetrable wall of Soviet Army and secret police. A pall of silence, broken only by the salvos of execution squads, hangs over the country. It is a struggle for the souls of the people. Remembering their historic ties with the United States, Tadeusz Kosciuszko and Kazimierz Pulaski, the Poles, both at home and abroad, turn toward the United States for help.

The main problem for Poland today is physical and spiritual survival, for which she needs American aid. Until true liberation can be achieved, the people of Poland and their free leaders abroad should be assured of American support. Unequivocal statements by prominent Americans, declaring their sympathy and pledging their aid in the struggle for the liberation of Poland, are invaluable as regards the morale and the will to resist of the Polish people.

The Americans of Polish descent are doing great work in helping their old country both materially and politically. The celebrations they organize in commemoration of Poland's National Day prove their devotion to their mother country and to the cause of freedom. Such celebrations are particularly valuable in view of the fact that the Communist government in Warsaw abolished the National Day and replaced it by the Red May 1.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 246) to authorize the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in financing a minimum foundation education program of public elementary and secondary schools, and in reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools, for the general welfare, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON].

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the period following the word "State", and in lieu thereof insert a comma and the following: "Provided, however, That funds expended to provide school-bus transportation shall be available to all school children on a just and equitable basis, without regard to race, creed, or color, or nationality, or the location or character of the school which the child attends."

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I do not believe any Senator can have any difficulty in understanding this amendment. As can be seen, it provides that if a State is to use any of the funds which are to become available under this bill for bus transportation for any of the children of a State, then it shall be used for the transportation of all children alike.

In ascertaining the amount that shall be available to each State under the terms of the bill, as I understand the formula, it provides for the taking of a census of all children between the ages of 5 and 17. That means every single child in the State between those two ages. It counts every child, no matter whether he goes to a public or a nonpublic school, for the purpose of measuring the amount of money which shall be allocated and given to the State under this piece of legislation.

My amendment provides that since every child is included within the measure of allocation, a child shall not be counted in for the purposes of ascertaining the amount, and then, if he happens to attend a nonpublic school, be counted out when it comes to the enjoyment of the services which are clearly permitted under the Constitution and under the decisions of the Supreme Court.

In the Everson case, decided about 2 years ago, in which Mr. Justice Black wrote the opinion, it was held that the transportation of youngsters from their homes to their schools and back again was clearly not in derogation of the first amendment to the Constitution, which prohibits the establishment of a state church or state religion. It is difficult to see how anyone could take exception to that conclusion.

During the war years we developed what was known as the school-lunch program. In that program we provided certain funds to furnish hot lunches for the school children of the Nation, so that their bodies might be sustained and nourished, and so that the old maxim of Juvenal, "A sound mind in a sound body," could be promoted. I believe that every Member of the Senate agrees that that program, which we have supported, has resulted most beneficially to the children of the country, and therefore to the country itself.

Only a few days ago we passed what I think is a very beneficent piece of legislation, the so-called school-health bill. It will be remembered that the bill went through the Senate with very little debate, although I am sure that it was carefully considered and well understood by the membership of the Senate. That bill provides, to the extent the funds will allow, for taking care of the health of all the children of the Nation, regardless of where they go to school.

Long ago the Supreme Court ratified a natural right of citizens of this country, a right which they derive directly from the Supreme Being, the right to determine where their children shall be educated. Several years ago the State of Oregon decided that it would enact a statute which would make mandatory the education of every single child, regardless of the wishes of the parents, in a school directly operated and supported by the State. The case known as Pierce against Oregon went to the Supreme Court for a test of the validity of that statute. In its opinion the Court declared that the child belongs to its parents, as the trustees of God, and not to the State, and, of course, the parents of the Pierce child were permitted to determine where the child should receive its education.

So the obligation which the State imposes for compulsory education has been recognized over decades as being satisfied when the child attends a school chosen by his or her parents, and which complies with the standards established by the State for the educational process.

We have a situation in which the parents have the right to send the child to a school of their choice. We have a situation in which the Government is to make available money for current expenditures, which includes bus transportation. Therefore, I submit that it follows most logically that we should adopt the policy of saying to the State, "If you transport any children to and from school with any of these funds, then you must transport all children to and from school."

In connection with the school-health program, we made no distinction in the bill which we passed as to the kind of child, his creed, race, or religion. We did not establish any such test for participation in the benefits afforded by the funds provided under that measure for repairing their teeth, examining their eyes, or performing any of the other basic and necessary services to bring a sound citizen to adulthood.

The reason why the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and I are urging this proposal is that the transportation of all children to and from school is only an act of common decency to avoid discrimination against the parents of children. The parents are taxed for the support of the public schools and those taxes are drained into the Federal Treasury, from which this appropriation will come. To hold that the transportation of Johnny Jones from his house, 8 miles away in the county, to a public school can be paid for out of these funds, but that his sister cannot be transported a distance of 7 miles along the same route to a nonpublic school, to me, certainly seems to be straining at something which is so obviously wrong that I wonder how it can seriously be urged. If we were to carry that principle to its natural conclusion, I suppose we would put a stop to the performance of his duty by a traffic policeman who might be directing traffic outside a nonpublic school for the benefit of the safety of the children attending such school. Under that principle, it might be urged that the sewers should be cut off from nonpublic schools or that sidewalks could not be laid in front of nonpublic schools.

Mr. President, the United States of America has not grown great under that kind of philosophy. The United States has not become great and powerful upon the principle that the state must oppose religion. I sometimes wonder what might be the situation if some Senator endeavored to bring a quo warranto or mandamus against the Senate of the United States for paying the salary of the chaplain of the Senate. I wonder what the situation might be at some future time if it were seriously urged that we should abolish the chaplains in the armed forces and should tear down the chapels at West Point and Annapolis. If the day ever were to come when such a proposal was taken seriously, then I say the sun of the United States would definitely be dimmed if it would not disappear altogether.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McMAHON. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. MILLER. Reverting to the observations the Senator from Connecticut made about the transportation of a boy living 8 miles from a public school which he attended and his sister living 7 miles from a nonpublic school which she attended, and the question of whether the cost of transporting the girl to the nonpublic school could be paid out of these funds, I ask whether the Senator from Connecticut knows of any instance in the adjudicated law of the Nation which would allow the cost of transporting the girl to the nonpublic school to be paid out of public funds, in view of the fact that some of the States have constitutional provisions against the making of such allowances or payments for such transportation?

Mr. McMAHON. I say to the Senator that 15 States have statutes explicitly authorizing the transportation of nonpublic-school pupils. Perhaps I had better read the list of those States into the RECORD. They are California, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Montana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, and Washington.

Four States give implicit authorization in their general transportation legislation. They are Connecticut, Louisiana, Maryland, and New Mexico.

In the third classification, we find that the courts in California, Kentucky, Maryland, New Jersey, and Washington have upheld the constitutionality of statutes authorizing bus service for nonpublic-school children. The decisions in California and Washington are being appealed.

The courts in Delaware, New York, and Oklahoma have declared such statutes unconstitutional.

The Supreme Court of the United States has ruled that the transportation of children to nonpublic schools does not violate the first and fourteenth amendments of the Federal Constitution.

I wish to say to my good friend the Senator from Idaho that what we are proposing to dispense under this bill are Federal funds, to be paid out of the Federal Treasury. There is no bar—and I emphasize the word "no"—to providing for the transportation of nonpublic-school children by the payment of funds raised by Federal taxes from citizens of the United States.

This amendment provides—I shall try to sum up its provisions as simply as I can—that if a State wishes to use any of this money for the transportation of any of the children living within its boundaries, then it must transport every child in the State who is attending any school which is approved by the State as being in compliance with the educational requirements of the State. I submit to the Senator from Idaho that this has as much to do with the teaching of religion, and it presents as much of a religious question—well, Mr. President, I hardly know where to find a sufficiently ludicrous comparison.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Connecticut for his explanation. It is very good.

Mr. McMAHON. I can hardly think of a fit comparison to make, to show how absolutely absurd it is in any way to connect the transportation of children's bodies from point A to point B with any thought that that would involve a violation of the first amendment of the Constitution.

Of course it was that very plain situation which brought about the decision in the Everson case, in a supreme court which I may say to the Senator, as is evidenced in the Champaign case which came along a few months later, was certainly, to say the least, vigilant in what it regarded—as the distinctions which must be drawn under the first amendment.

So, Mr. President, for the Senate to say that as a matter of policy such funds coming from the Federal Treasury can be paid for the transportation of some children of American citizens, but not for the transportation of other children of American citizens, and to say that such a distinction should be made against some parents simply because they are exercising their God-given right to send their children where they have a right to send them for their education, is something that I cannot understand or comprehend.

Mr. President, much more could be said about the amendment, but I feel that I have made clear what I regard the situation to be and what elemental justice should dictate.

I should like to close by saying something which perhaps it is not necessary for me to say. Like all other loyal Americans, I believe that the church and the state should not be controlled by each other. We have a very simple rule to guide our conduct, Mr. President. Christ himself enunciated it. He was asked:

Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar, or not?

The Pharisees thought they had presented Christ with a crushing dilemma. But Christ said to them:

Bring me a penny, that I may see it.

When they did that, He said:

Whose is this image and superscription?

They replied:

Caesar's.

Then Christ said, answering them:

Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's and to God the things that are God's.

So long as we adopt in our country and in our legislative halls the rule of conduct of rendering to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God, the things that are God's, we shall not get into trouble. The pending amendment is clearly one that relates, I may say, to the material aspects of the bringing up of a child—the transportation of his little body across highways, in order that his body shall not be crushed under the wheels of an onrushing freight train or a roaring truck, the getting of that boy or girl safely to the point of education, chosen, mind you, by his parents under their God-given right. That is what I propose shall be done under the amendment. I can see no valid reason for its being rejected.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I want to speak briefly with respect to the theory on which the bill was framed, and to try to explain why the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON] as well as the amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], is in conflict with the basic theory of the pending bill. The theory is that of noninterference with the State either in the education it chooses to give its children or in the method by which the State administers its school system.

The question relating to parochial schools has always been one of our most difficult problems. Under the Constitution of the United States, the Supreme Court has held that public money may not be spent, either by the Federal Government or by the States, for sectarian educational purposes. But the Supreme Court has said that some of the incidents of education, such as school-bus transportation and, in some respects, school books, perhaps, may be paid for by the States for both types of schools. The decisions are somewhat uncertain. How they will ultimately be resolved I do not know. But what we propose under the pending bill is to say to each school, "We give you this Federal money, and you may spend it for any purpose for which you spend State money. If you spend State money for school-bus transportation for parochial and private schools, you may spend Federal money for that purpose also. If you do not spend your own money for that purpose, you may not spend Federal money for that purpose." In other words, we try to leave the system exactly as it is.

Most of the States prohibit, either by their constitution or by law, the spending of money for bus transportation for private and parochial schools. Therefore, if the amendment were adopted, we should be in effect attempting to nullify the laws of those particular States. If the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Missouri were adopted, we should be taking the opposite position, trying to change the laws of certain of the States that permit the use of their own money for parochial schools, refusing to let them use Federal money for that purpose.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. I merely ask the Senator whether he understands that my silence gives consent to his statement regarding my amendment?

Mr. TAFT. No. I am delighted to yield, but the Senator no doubt will make a forceful presentation of the argument for his amendment.

The pending amendment, however, would operate in the following manner: Here is a State, under whose constitution and laws, perhaps by express vote of its people, the State is forbidden to use educational funds for bus transportation for private and parochial school pupils. The amendment proposes to say to that State, "If you pay money for bus transportation for public schools, you will have to pay money, in violation of your constitution, for bus transportation also for parochial schools." I do not think we can do that. As I see it, the effect of it would be really to bar that State entirely from aid. The State might wish to comply with the amendment by eliminating the use of public funds for bus transportation for public schools, but it is absolutely impossible for them to do that. Therefore, it seems to me the adoption of the amendment would make it impossible for such State to obtain aid at all. I think everyone agrees that we want to interfere as little as possible with the administration of educational affairs in each State throughout the United States. We want to let each State determine the method by which it will provide education for its children. We do not want to interfere. Last night the Senate rejected an amendment proposing that every State receiving Federal aid to education must pay certain salaries to teachers. That is one of the essential features of State administration. The amendment was rejected, not because we do not approve of $2,850 as the minimum for teachers' salaries, but because we would be interfering in the administration of the schools of any particular State. Once we start such interference, I can see no limit to the extent to which it may go.

I think we stand on safe ground when we say we propose that each State shall determine for itself the method by which the administration of its schools shall be handled and when we leave to each State the determination of how it is to handle the parochial school system. Under the bill as framed, if we do not adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, the parochial schools in any State may bring about a change in the constitution of the State, or in the laws of the State. The whole question can be fought on a State basis. It will be a matter of State home rule, if you please, on each of the questions. I think that is the way we should leave it. I do not think we should say to a State, which today through its constitution or laws refuses to provide bus transportation for parochial school pupils, "You must give that assistance, if you are to receive Federal aid." Nor do I think we should say to States which have adopted the policy of giving bus transportation to parochial school pupils that they cannot use one cent of Federal money for that purpose, that the bus transportation must be provided for parochial schools entirely out of State funds. That is the basic principle.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. I realize that that is the position of the Senator from Ohio. Will the Senator explain for me and for other Senators the distinction in his mind between the health bill which we passed the other day, and the amendment which I propose?

Mr. TAFT. It rises out of the fact that there is no constitutional prohibition so far as I know that interferes with the power of a State to give health aid to any person anywhere. Health aid has nothing whatever to do with education. Education, under the Constitution, according to the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, must be provided on a public, nonsectarian basis. Health has no relation whatever, as I see it, to that particular principle, which has led to very violent differences of opinion in many States, and also in cases presented to the United States Supreme Court, as to how far Federal aid to education may be extended to parochial schools.

I think the health bill was entirely different. As a matter of fact, 3 years ago, in the hospital bill, we gave aid to private hospitals, including sectarian hospitals of all kinds. The hospital business has grown up largely on the basis of private sectarian hospitals. There is no question whatever of involving in any way an educational matter with a sectarian matter.

I think the health bill follows the principle of the hospital bill. But in the educational field a very different question is involved. When I was a member of the Ohio Legislature I fought very bitterly a bill which attempted to require the reading of the Bible in public schools, because it was felt generally by Catholics and others that the reading of the Bible would be done, in 9 cases out of 10, on a Protestant basis, and would give some sectarian color to education in the public schools. I was required to oppose it because of the provisions of the Ohio Constitution and the Constitution of the United States. But that has nothing to do with the question of health, so far as I can see.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that in the health bill we anticipated the refusal of any State to give aid to all children, regardless of race, creed, or color, by inserting what is known as a withholding clause and providing that if the State would not take care of Johnny Jones because he attended a Seventh-Day Adventist school, or a German Lutheran school, or a Roman Catholic school, funds would be withheld. We inserted that provision so that the Federal Security Administrator could make the money available to all children.

I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio this further question: Is it the thought in his mind that there is any religious question involved in the transportation of an American child from point A to point B? Does the Senator believe that impinges at all upon the religious function?

Mr. TAFT. Many States think it does.

Mr. McMAHON. I did not ask what the States think.

Mr. TAFT. I have received protests from persons who believe very strongly that aid of that kind to private schools or parochial schools violates the Constitution, because transportation is one of the essential incidents of education today. If we consider the public school system as a whole, we find that transportation is regarded in many States as an essential feature of the whole educational system. Yes; I think that is very clearly true, and I think it will be found that it affects the whole system of education in this respect, that in Ohio, for instance, when the question of centralization arises, it might be considered that we would be able to give better education in the central schools and abolish the smaller schools. We would save money in that way, but we would have to have bus transportation as an additional expense. It is regarded in many States, and it certainly has been held by 4 or 5 members of the Supreme Court, that bus transportation is an integral part of the school system, as being an assistance to the schools. That is what has been held in a great majority of the States. I do not undertake to say whether it is right or wrong. But I say we should not interfere through the Federal Government, with the right of a State to handle its aid to education and the incidents of education, in such manner as the States shall see fit. I think bus transportation is an incident of education. If we once say to the States, "You can use Federal money only to operate your system this way," or "You must run it in some other way," I can think of many kinds of interference that might be superimposed on the system. The only fair way I can see is to say in the bill, "If you do not take this position regarding bus transportation, and if your State Constitution and your State laws permit you to, and you do, dispense money for bus transportation to parochial schools, then you may use Federal money for that purpose." If the State constitution and laws prevent it, we shall not say that the laws and constitution are wrong in that respect.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further.

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to point out to the Senator that the amendment proposed by three other Senators and myself provides only that the State shall not use any of the funds for transportation if it does not use them to transport all children who are counted in for the purpose of making the allocation of Federal funds. I should like to ask the Senator, further, if he thinks, as apparently he does, that the health of the child is further divorced from the educational field than is the transportation of the child to school. It seems to me that if a child is not well and cannot go to school at all, he is certainly being totally deprived of an education. If however a child does not receive bus transportation, I suppose he can struggle over 10 miles of dangerous highway, in order to get to school. It seems to me, when we established the principle in the health bill—and I might remind the Senator that he was one of the sponsors——

Mr. TAFT. I might say to the Senator that I agreed to that at the earnest request of the Senator and because I thought it was not a violation of principle. I certainly do not think the fact that I believe very strongly that health has nothing to do with education and should be treated separately and on an entirely different basis, is any argument as to why I should give up the basic constitutional principles relating to education. I do not think my liberality, if the Senator wants to call it that, with regard to the health bill is an argument in favor of changing my views on the subject of education.

It is very important to keep the educational system of the States completely free from Federal domination and Federal direction. The great objection—and I recognize its force—to aid to education is the danger that sooner or later there will be Federal control. We do not want to start out by providing a little piece of Federal control here and a little piece of Federal control somewhere else. I think the educational question is an entirely different problem from the health problem.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I may say to the Senator from Ohio that I am delighted to have in the RECORD a testimonial as to my influence with him. My quarrel is not with his liberality, but with his logic. The Senator has, with great emphasis, stated that the health of the child presents a different question from that of carrying him to and from school. But I again point out—and perhaps the fault lies in the mind of the Senator from Connecticut—that I cannot see any essential difference between fixing a child's teeth and giving him a ride on a bus. There may be others who can make the distinction clear. At any rate, that is for the Senate to decide. I shall content myself with saying that it does not make sense to me, even though it does to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. If there were no other differences, there is this great difference, that the great majority of the States prohibit the use of their money for providing bus transportation to and from parochial schools. No State prohibits the use of its money for the improvement of the health of children, wherever the children may be found, because it has no relation to education. The health bill has no constitutional objection, whereas, if we agree to this amendment, it will mean that many States cannot accept Federal money. That would be the effect of it. It would simply throw out any Federal aid to any State which prohibits, by its constitution, the use of money for bus transportation to and from parochial schools. That alone is a sufficient difference, regardless of any logical difference between health and bus transportation. The fact is that bus transportation is part of the educational system, always dispensed by the educational department, and health is sometimes handled one way and sometimes another, but certainly can be handled without any constitutional violation.

Mr. McMAHON. Just to keep the record straight, I will say that the Senator's statement that the States almost universally have prohibited transportation of nonpublic-school pupils is not correct. I do not know whether the Senator heard me read the list of the States which explicitly authorize the transportation of nonpublic-school pupils.

Mr. TAFT. With due respect to the Senator, what has that to do with the matter? If a large majority of the States prohibit it, that is just as strong an argument as if one prohibited it.

Mr. McMAHON. Let us see if it is a large majority. There are 15 States, and I notice from reading the list that some of them are among the large States of the Union, 4 give explicit direction, which makes 19, then there are 5 others in which it has been held constitutional. However, they are included in the 15. There are about 20 States, I would say.

I would remind the Senator that in his argument with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], my colleague, he went to great pains to point out that the money was collected from all the citizens of the United States, that it was not collected in Connecticut from citizens of Connecticut, but is being collected from citizens of the United States.

I wish further to point out to the Senator that his assertion, which he makes with his customary force, to the effect that the constitutions of the States permit the school authorities in those States to give health aid and health attention to nonpublic-school pupils, is not correct. That is why the committee inserted in the bill, and the Senate approved, a provision that if the States would not take care of Johnny Jones' health, if he went to a nonpublic school, then the money would be paid over by the Federal Security Administrator direct to the school in which he was sheltered and taught.

Mr. TAFT. Again, at the earnest request of the Senator, I agreed to that. I agreed to it because I felt that it meant nothing, that every State in the Union could do it. I would have had very serious question about that provision if I had not been satisfied that the States could do it anyway, regardless of the provision, if they desired to, under their constitutions and laws.

I may point out further that there is no answer that I can see to the other proposition; there is no answer to the contention that if we adopt this provision we cut State aid off from those States which have adopted the policy of refusing to give aid to parochial schools for bus transportation. I do not think that is fair to those States. I do not know why we should not let the people themselves decide what they want to do.

There is one basic fact of which I want to remind the Senator. Those States take the position that they are not discriminating between children of one faith and another. Those States are all prepared to give free public education to every child, no matter what his religion, his race, or his other characteristics. They are prepared to give free education in the public schools if the children wish to take it. So that basically there is no discrimination in those States between children. That is the position the States take, and it certainly is a perfectly logical position which they can take. Therefore, in my opinion, there is no discrimination in their action. That is their State policy, and it seems to me that if this question is a serious question it should be left to each State to determine for itself, and that is what the bill does.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask the Senate to reject the pending amendment and let those States which do not give bus transportation to parochial schools do what they please. I also ask the Senate to reject the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Missouri, which provides that States which do give bus transportation to parochial schools cannot use Federal money for that purpose. Let us leave the matter in each case to the States.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Is it not true that both amendments do violence to the fundamental concept of the bill, which is to leave the administration, the operation, and the control of the schools entirely in the hands of the States?

Mr. TAFT. The States and their people.

Mr. HILL. In other words, if any State today is not providing bus transportation for its children, the people in the State, if they see fit, can provide the bus transportation. If they do, the Federal funds would go to help to provide bus transportation. Is not that true?

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. And is not it true that either one of these amendments would open the door we have tried so assiduously to keep closed, namely, the door of Federal interference in the operation of the schools in the several States?

Mr. TAFT. The Senator states the proposition very forcefully.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment, and ask that it be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 8 and to insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

SEC. 8. The United States Commissioner of Education shall cause an audit to be made of the expenditures of funds under the act by each State educational authority. Such audits shall at all times be available for public inspection. If either before or after an audit has been made any person shall complain to the Commissioner that he has reason to believe that any portion of the funds appropriated under this act have been expended by any State in a manner contrary to the provisions of this act, or have otherwise been lost or unlawfully used, the Commissioner shall afford such person a hearing on his complaint. If the Commissioner, after notice and hearing to the State charged with the improper expenditure or loss, upon either complaint filed by any person or upon the Commissioner's own complaint, finds that any portion of the funds appropriated under this act have been expended by any State in a manner contrary to the provisions of this act, or have otherwise been lost or unlawfully used, an equal amount shall, after reasonable notice, be withheld from subsequent payments to any such State unless such amount is replaced by such State and expended for the purposes originally intended: Provided, That the State educational authority shall have the right to appeal, within 30 days, from the decision of the Commissioner to withhold funds to a United States district court and such court shall have jurisdiction as to both fact and law. Any person who has filed a complaint before the Commissioner pursuant to this section shall likewise have the right to appeal, within 30 days from the decision of the Commissioner not to withhold funds, to a United States district court. If the Commissioner fails to provide a hearing on a complaint within 3 months after it has been filed with him or fails to issue a decision within 6 months after the close of the hearing on such complaint, the person who filed the complaint may file a suit in a United States district court which shall then try the case de novo. In either an appeal from a decision of the Commissioner not to withhold funds or a trial de novo of a suit filed after the Commissioner has failed to proceed to a decision within the time specified, if the court finds that any portion of the funds appropriated under this act have been expended by any State in a manner contrary to the provisions of this act or have otherwise been lost or unlawfully used, the court shall direct the Commissioner to withhold an equal amount from subsequent payments unless such amount is replaced by such State and expended for the purposes originally intended.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, on page 15 of the report of the committee on the pending bill it is stated that under the terms of the bill the State of California will receive for many years to come the sum of $8,435,000 a year, the State of Louisiana will receive $10,370,000 a year, and the State of Texas will receive $12,640,000 a year. It is true, as the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] said, that the Congress is not concerned with where the State obtains the money which it uses to match the money coming from the Federal Government, but I say, Mr. President, in view of what some of the States are trying to do with tidelands oil, the question now is whether or not a few States are ultimately going to receive from tidelands oil billions of dollars to aid the school children in their States while some of the inland States such as North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, Colorado, Utah and some other States are going to receive none of that money. If the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the California case is followed in the case of Texas and those of some other States, then, of course, all the money which comes from tidelands oil, instead of going to a few States, is going to be made available to all the States, and a good portion of it, I hope, will be used for the benefit of the school children, the school teachers and the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. President, now while we are in this Chamber, oil companies are taking oil from wells sunk off the coast of Texas, 54 miles in some instances, 27 miles in other instances. Humble Oil & Refining Co., Superior Oil Co., Standard Oil Co. of Kansas, Standard Oil Co. of Texas which is a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, Stanolind Oil & Gas Co., Phillips Petroleum Co., Magnolia Petroleum Co., the Texas Co., Kerr McGee Oil Industries, Inc., of Oklahoma City, Standard Oil Co. of Ohio, Sun Oil Co., and Shell Oil Co., Inc., are busy taking oil far out in the ocean, from 27 to 54 miles.

The State of Texas has made leases with these companies. Texas says, "We own all land under this water miles and miles and miles out into the ocean." They do not limit it to 3 miles. We do not hear anything being said any more about the 3-mile limit, but various States claim to own the oil land far out into the ocean. The State of Louisiana, through its governor, has made leases similar to those made by the State of Texas, only the oil lands claimed by that State go farther out into the ocean than the lands claimed by Texas. Louisiana says, "We own the oil lands at least 100 miles out into the ocean."

So, Mr. President, the companies I named are now taking oil from the ocean bed many miles from shore. How much money are the States receiving for this oil? I have in my hand a circular sent out by a very distinguished citizen of Texas, in which he says that Texas is getting $1,000,000 a month from tidelands oil leases, and they have just gotten started. Think of it, Mr. President, $1,000,000 a month is being paid to the State of Texas for such leases. Texas has passed a law providing that that money shall be used for the benefit of the school children of Texas.

Mr. President, nowhere in the bill has any cognizance been taken of this vast amount of money which is coming into the State of Texas, or which in the past in some instances has gone into the coffers of the State of California, and which today is going into the Treasury of the State of Louisiana. The tideland States are not satisfied with the decision in the California case. From Texas came the circular I referred to, sent broadcast over the country, in which it is asserted that the people of Texas want to back up certain public officials who, they say, are going to see to it that Texas keeps on receiving this oil.

Mr. President, how much oil do Senators suppose lies off the coast of Texas alone? Ten billion barrels. The sale price today is $2.65 a barrel. So we find the prodigious sum of $26,500,000,000 in value of oil lying off the coast of Texas.

Mr. LONG rose.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I prefer not to yield now. At the conclusion of my remarks I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Louisiana or to any other Senator who desires to have me yield to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Off the coast of Texas lies oil to the value of $26,500,000,000.

I have in my hand a statement made by Walter S. Hallanan, president of the Plymouth Oil Co., made at a joint meeting of the subcommittees of the Senate and House Committees on the Judiciary. It happens that Mr. Hallanan is a very prominent Republican. I believe he is the National Republican Committeeman from the State of West Virginia. His statement is available, because it is printed. I shall quote only parts of his statement. Mr. Hallanan said:

> May I say in the beginning that Plymouth Oil Co. has a substantial interest in leases acquired from the State of Texas through competitive bidding and covering approximately 120,000 acres of tidelands off the coast of Texas.

A few moments ago I read to the Senate a list of the other companies which are interested in and have leases off the coast of Texas. The president of one company, the Plymouth Oil Co., says his company has 120,000 acres under lease. He continues:

> It is the belief of the petroleum industry that the prompt exploration, development, and operation of the oil possibilities in the submerged lands of this continent will greatly assist us in meeting the greatly increased demands for petroleum and its products. The action which the Congress takes with respect to these submerged lands is of the greatest importance to our national economy and security.

I read from the second page of his statement as follows:

> In the recent war the oil industry established production, refining, and transportation records that had theretofore been regarded as fantastic, and now, in peacetime, it is producing crude oil at the rate of 5,370,000 barrels per day—an increase of 617,000 barrels per day over the peak production during World War II. This increased volume of crude oil is equal to twice the current production of the great east Texas fields and more than double the present output from the 28,000 producing wells in the State of Kansas. The increase in national crude-oil production of over 600,000 barrels daily is equivalent to the total quantity now being supplied from the States of Arkansas, Mississippi, New Mexico, Wyoming, and Illinois combined.

I am not putting the entire statement by Mr. Hallanan in the RECORD because some of it is not material. I am putting in the part about the submerged lands. The question is whether or not the school children, the taxpayers, the school teachers, and the school districts in the inland States are to receive any part of this money for school purposes, and whether or not Congress, in enacting a bill of this kind, which will be permanent legislation, should take cognizance of the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Hallanan continues:

> The policy with respect to submerged lands should be predicated upon giving the greatest possible encouragement, with the least possible delay, to the findings of oil pools in them. The question which I know the members of this committee ponder is how that can best be done. Of equal importance to our national security in determining a policy concerning these submerged lands is the necessity for immediate development of any oil pools that may be discovered.

Secretary Forrestal said on January 19:

> The tidelands areas in particular are believed to hold great promise in adding oil to our available resources. It is the view of the National Military Establishment that development of the tidelands areas should proceed as rapidly as possible, and that all necessary action should be taken to permit rapid development of these areas. Delays in the development of the oil potentials in the tidelands is considered contrary to the best interest of the United States from the viewpoint of national security.

At another place in his testimony Mr. Walter Hallanan said:

> Since there is no legislation in effect providing for the development of these submerged lands—

And I call this particularly to the attention of the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. Today there is no such legislation, and apparently there is going to be no such legislation in this bill, unless the distinguished Senator and his committee put it in somewhere.

> Since there is no legislation in effect providing for the development of these submerged lands, we do not know the conditions private industry would face in operating such lands under Federal control. However, we now have a realistic view of the intentions and desires of the Departments of Interior, Justice, and Defense as evidence by the Submerged Coastal Lands Act recently introduced in the Congress. Although this bill is not pending before this committee, it provides us with a guide to the problems a producer would encounter in dealing with Federal administration of these lands.

I turn now to the Republican platform adopted at Philadelphia last year. What does it say?

> We favor restoration to the States of their historic rights to the tide and submerged lands, tributary waters, lakes, and streams.

Progressive Republicans from all over the United States rebelled, as did the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], who was a delegate to that convention. He protested before the platform committee of the Republican Party at having this plank placed in the Republican platform.

What did the Democratic Party do? It took the other view. I am proud of the view it took. It said that the submerged lands belonged to all the people of the United States, and not to a few States. The Democratic Party favored the decision rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States in the California case. In other words, in my judgment the Democratic Party took the position of all the people against the position taken by the Republican Party that those lands, and all the oil—$26,500,000,000 worth off the coast of Texas—should be exploited by the big oil companies, through private industry, by means of deals made with various State officials.

As I previously stated, the value of the oil runs into fantastic sums, if what the oilmen have said is true. Off the coast of Texas there is $26,500,000,000 worth of oil already discovered, and they have only made a beginning. According to the oilmen, off the coast of California there are hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of oil. Why should not the inland States, the school children and the school districts, get a part of that money? Why should not provision be made for it in a bill of this kind?

I have before me a release by the People's Lobby, issued by Benjamin C. Marsh, executive secretary, on the 5th of May 1948. It was sent to the United States Senate. Apparently no attention was paid to it. I became so interested in this question that approximately 10 days before election I wrote a letter to the President of the United States inviting his attention to the fact that this oil was being taken out by the States of Texas and Louisiana. I may say further that I consulted some of the very best lawyers in the country with a view to bringing an injunction proceeding in behalf of the school children and the people of the State of North Dakota. Upon looking into the question I found that a United States Senator could not bring an action of that kind. I was advised by counsel that such an action had to be brought by the Governor.

When I was so advised I went to the Attorney General of the United States, and then wrote to the President. President Truman replied to my letter and stated that he would bring the matter immediately to the attention of the Attorney General with the request that prompt action be taken.

I compliment the President of the United States. Just as soon as the election was over and he had time to return to Washington for a few days, he called in the Attorney General, Mr. Tom Clark, and an action was brought against the State of Texas, which action is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. All the oil companies have been served and the States have been served, and an effort is being made to have the Supreme Court of the United States pass on this question, which involves Texas.

There is some difference between the States of Texas and California. California came into the Union by purchase, but Texas had been a republic. It had been a sovereign country. The Governor of Texas and other people in Texas claim that the decision of the Supreme Court involving the State of California does not apply to Texas at all. The Attorney General of the United States says otherwise. He says that in his opinion the oil in the lands off the coast of Texas belong to all the people of the entire United States, and not alone to the people of Texas.

The argument as between California and Texas runs somewhat along this line: Before California became a State it was simply a huge tract of land that was owned by the Federal Government, in the same way that the Federal Government today owns Alaska. So when California became a State it acquired only those rights that are appropriate to State governments. That is, when it became a State it acquired all kinds of political rights, but no property rights. In other words, the land in California still was owned by the United States, after California became a State, in the same way that it was owned before; and that was the basis for the various homestead laws. So the United States continued to own land; but it made provision, through Congress, for the disposition of the land. It gave some lands to individuals under the Homestead Act. It gave others to the railroads, under the railroad land grants. It gave others to States for educational purposes. It gave others to various groups, for a variety of dispositions.

But in Texas the situation was different. Texas, as history shows, was an independent nation for 9 years before it entered the Union. As an independent nation for 9 years, Texas made treaties with other countries and participated in international affairs. When Texas entered the Union, the United States did not automatically acquire any land which Texas owned. The only lands which the United States acquired were those it acquired by virtue of purchase, gift, or in other fashion. Therefore, there well may be a different picture or situation regarding the submerged lands off the coast of Texas, as compared with the submerged lands off the coast of California, which the United States purchased, or the submerged lands off the coast of Louisiana, acquired similarly, or the submerged lands off the coast of Alaska, if Alaska were made a State today. Mr. President, there is that possible difference; but as a matter of fact it is quite clear that the land off the coast of Texas is still owned by the United States Government, for the reason that the submerged lands in controversy are, to a certain extent, included within the 3-mile belt.

The 3-mile belt concept, as applied to lands off the coast of Texas, and as applied elsewhere in the United States, is a comparatively modern concept. Contrary to the popular assumption that that concept has existed for many years, actually it is comparatively new. The average person thinks that the 3-mile rule has been in effect almost from time immemorial, but as a matter of fact that is not so at all. As late as 1876, less than 100 years ago, the House of Lords reached the decision that the 3-mile belt had no validity off the coast of Great Britain, and so there had to be a special act of Parliament to provide a contrary resolve.

The 3-mile-belt principle has grown up over the years, and it has been only comparatively recently that it has been accepted in international law.

The argument would be, therefore, that at the time when the Constitution of the United States was adopted in 1789, there was no 3-mile belt whatsoever, and that the freedom of the seas operated right up to the low-water mark. Of course, the 3-mile-belt rule emerged as the years went by, but only by reason of the action of the United States in international councils and international law. It was the National Government which was responsible for bringing the 3-mile belt into existence as a reality; and that is true not only for such places as California, where we own the adjacent shore line, but for other States, such as Massachusetts, New York, or Texas, where the United States may not have owned the shore lines. But the submerged lands and the rights intended came into being as a result of the position of the United States as a sovereignty in international affairs. That would be as equally applicable to Texas as it would be to California.

There is some doubt whether in 1845, when Texas came into the Union, there was such a thing as the 3-mile belt. If it came into being at some later date as a result of some action of the Federal Government when participating in international affairs, the contention is available that the rights which thus emerged, did so on behalf of the Federal Government which produced them.

Mr. President, I know that my distinguished friend the Senator from Utah, is vitally interested in this matter, because if this law applies to all school children in the United States, instead of only to those in a few States, the result will be that in the State of Utah millions upon millions of dollars will be available, although such funds are not available at the present time, and of course they will not be available if the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the California case does not stand up.

As I said a moment ago, Texas entered the Union in 1845. It was much later, under international law—after the United States, together with and in consultation with other nations had been dealing with the question of whether vessels could sail within 3 miles of the coast line and still be within their rights in international law—that the 3-mile rule came into effect. But even assuming that Texas is entitled to the lands included within the 3-mile belt, that would be the limit of any such right on the part of Texas. However, the oil is being drilled for 27 miles off the coast or in some cases as far as 54 miles off the coast; and Louisiana has been leasing the ocean bed, where oil has been discovered, nearly 100 miles out into the ocean; and the officials of Louisiana and Texas are getting oil taxes and are saying that they will get one-eighth of all the oil, although it is set aside for the school children of Louisiana and Texas.

Mr. President, I think every Member of this body who was here when Burton K. Wheeler was a Member of the Senate recognizes what a fine lawyer he was and is today. All Senators know that he was one of the most capable lawyers who ever sat in this body. I have before me an opinion which was prepared by Senator Wheeler on December 4, 1947. It is very similar to an opinion which was given by the attorney general of Montana—one of the few States whose attorney general fought the claims of California to all this oil.

Mr. President, before I refer further to the opinion, I wish to read a statement by the People's Lobby, showing the enormous profits in this oil and the enormous amounts of money which will go to school districts, either for all the school children or for the school children of the favored States. This statement or letter by the People's Lobby was sent to the Members of the United States Senate on May 5, 1943:

TIDELANDS OIL BILL IS THREAT TO PROSPERITY, SECURITY, AND PEACE

To Members of the United States Senate:

The tidelands oil bill, to give States ownership of their coastal-waters oil and other natural resources, is a threat to our prosperity, security, and peace.

The Federal Government, through unemployment insurance, old-age pensions, parity prices for farm products, and so forth, has underwritten a standard of living, however low, for American producers; while it is unchallenged sponsor for measures of defense, to maintain world peace and avert threat of aggression.

This automatically vests in the Federal Government the right to retain control of raw materials essential to that maximum production upon which adequate distribution, general welfare, and defense rest.

The tidelands-oil bill ends that right, for while the Federal Government could continue to tax profits of exploiters of such natural resources, it would make most difficult if not impossible, the more important duty of the Government to conserve our depleted natural resources, allocate them where they will best serve the people of the United States and of the world, and fix the price thereof.

Only fear of such Federal action explains this bill.

The National City Bank—

That is, of New York City.

The National City Bank monthly letter for April gives the enormous profits of 41 leading oil and gas corporations in a few cases before depletion charges.

In 1947 their net profits, after taxes, were $69,983,000, an increase of 98.2 percent over 1946, and 19.9 percent on net worth compared with 12.1 in 1946.

The net return of 3,102 corporations is reported as 9.5 percent in 1946, and 12.2 percent in 1947—far below the net return in both years of exploiters of oil and gas.

The net worth of these 41 oil and gas corporations in 1947 was almost $352,000,000, an increase in the year of $59,000,000, or 20.1 percent—one-fifth.

I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the statement be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the remainder of the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress reports these profits before taxes of leading oil companies for the first 9 months of 1947 and 1939:

	Million
Amerada	$10.4 and $1.2
Atlantic Refining Co	10.8 and 5.0
Continental Oil Co	24.9 and 6.3
Shell Union	38.7 and 11.8
Phillips	25.7 and 9.8
Socony Vacuum	66.0 and 34.5
Standard California	66.5 and 17.9
Texas Co	78.4 and 32.9

Congress would be wholly inconsistent to vote billions for defense, and turn back to State exploitation, the resources essential to such defense.

Kill the tidelands oil bill to foster prosperity and peace.

Yours sincerely,

BENJAMIN C. MARSH,
Executive Secretary.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I have here the opinion of the attorney general of the State of Montana. In Montana this subject is very important. Montana is the home of the Anaconda Copper Co. Billions of dollars of mineral wealth lies within the State. It becomes of vital importance who owns the minerals, whether the Federal Government is to have charge of them, or whether they are to be owned by a few people. The opinion is by R. V. Bottomly, attorney general of Montana. He had been requested by Mr. Walter R. Johnson, attorney general of Nebraska, to join in the action. He refused to join, and he tells why. He says:

MY DEAR GENERAL: I have had a great deal of correspondence with different attorneys general during the time of the preparation of briefs for the Supreme Court hearing on the matter of the ownership of lands beneath navigable waters along the coast of California. (United States v. California, law ed. advance opinions, vol. 91, No. 17, p. 1414.)

I took no part in regard to the rehearing on the matter in the Supreme Court because I felt that the decision of the Supreme Court is for the best interest of the State of Montana and all of the other so-called reclamation States.

I call the attention of the distingushed Senator from Utah to this statement which is that of the attorney general of Montana, who says:

I felt that the decision of the Supreme Court is for the best interests of the State of Montana and all of the other so-called reclamation States.

Of course, he is right. The opinion continues:

I took as active a part as I could to defeat House Joint Resolution 225 while it was before the Congress.

Your communication of recent date is before me, setting forth the National Association of Attorneys General campaign to have the Congress nullify the decision of our Supreme Court in the above-mentioned case.

For me, I cannot understand how any attorneys general, outside of perhaps Texas and Louisiana, and maybe California, and yet, even California needs reclamation moneys ever so badly, can take such a stand.

My reason for my attitude in this matter as you undoubtedly know, is as follows—

This explains why the people of Utah, North Dakota, and other States are so vitally interested. This is why:

Out of all oil royalties, rentals, and bonuses taken by the United States Government under its leases the 17 reclamation States receive 52½ percent of it for reclamation and irrigation.

Out of the hundreds of millions of dollars that some of the oil companies in California have drained out of the lands, under the offshore lands under the Pacific Ocean, the State of California alone receives 5 percent; no other State receives anything from this production.

For production off the coast of Texas, amounting to $25,500,000,000, Texas receives 12½ percent. The record shows that Texas for a long time has been getting $1,000,000 a month out of their oil, which, in my judgment, under decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, belongs to all the school children of the country. The opinion continues:

Whereas, if this land and the oil therein is owned by the Federal Government—

I call this particularly to the attention of the distinguished Senator from Utah, because I may say to my distinguished friend that the people of North Dakota are going to rely upon the distinguished Senator from Utah to protect their interests in behalf of the school children. Also, I believe the school children all over the country, when they understand the situation, are going to rely upon him to protect them. If we cannot get protection at the hands of the distinguished Senator from Utah, then, indeed, the situation will be almost hopeless so far as these billions upon billions of dollars are concerned. I read further:

Whereas, if this land and the oil therein is owned by the Federal Government and leased for production by the United States Government, at least 12½ percent of these untold millions would go to the United States Treasury and out of such 12½ percent, 52½ percent would be segregated in the United States Treasury to be appropriated for irrigation and reclamation in the reclamation States, of which your State of Nebraska is one.

That, I may say, is for education, according to former Senator Wheeler, who goes into the educational feature of it very carefully and shows how much of the money is applied to educational purposes. The opinion continues:

If the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is upheld and not modified by legislation of the Congress—

Mind you, Mr. President, after the Attorney General of the United States had won the case in the Supreme Court, a rehearing was requested, and the attorney general of Montana says:

If the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is upheld and not modified by legislation of the Congress, millions of dollars will be paid into the United States Treasury for oil already taken out and for oil of untold worth that will be taken out, and 52½ percent of all such money can be and will be under the present law, appropriated by Congress for projects in your State and mine, and the other reclamation States which need this money so badly.

Besides the foregoing 37½ percent of all such bonuses, royalties and rentals are now returned and will be returned to the State of origin for credit to the State school funds, and the State highway fund as the legislature of such State may direct.

I cannot understand how the attorneys general of any of the reclamation States, can justify their stand, in the best interest of their respective States, in attempting, by legislation of the Congress, to nullify the decision of our Supreme Court.

For these reasons I am utterly opposed to any program or lobby to influence the Congress to again pass such an act as President Truman vetoed, and I am doing all in my power to influence what Congressmen I may to fight such a bill in the interests of our respective reclamation States.

I hope your recent letter reflects only the view of the National Association of Attorneys General and not your official view as attorney general of the State of Nebraska, and I hope you will join with me in pursuing a course which will illustrate to our National Congress the necessity of leaving the United States Supreme Court's decision undisturbed.

I therefore thought it was only right and proper that I notify you of my stand in this matter, and as president of the National Association of Attorneys General, I request that my name not be used in any way, shape or form in furthering the program which is now under way.

Sincerely yours,

R. V. BOTTOMLY,
Attorney General.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LANGER. I prefer not to be interrupted until I get through. At that time I shall be glad to yield.

I may say further, Mr. President, I have had the matter very carefully briefed by Hon. Robert E. Lee Jordan, of Washington, D. C., and by Mr. Orin Walker, who appeared as attorney for Mr. Jordan in opposition to Senate bills 1988 and 2165. The brief goes back to the very beginning, when California was admitted into the Union as a State, in September 1850, at which time it possessed no land, but by virtue of the enabling act, became a sovereign political State, upon its admission. I recommend to anyone interested a study of the testimony given before the subcommittee, particularly with reference to questions which were asked by the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] and the answers which were given; and also a study of the minority views, as I remember, made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri, submitted to the full Committee on the Judiciary. The report was made orally. In my opinion, it was one of the greatest masterpieces to which I have ever listened. The Senator spoke for approximately 2 hours, citing decisions, and, in some cases, even citing the line and the page. In my opinion, the report made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri is absolutely unanswerable.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks the entire brief be printed, because I know of no other brief which has gone into the subject so fully, carefully, at length, and in detail as has this brief.

There being no objection, the brief was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF ORIN DEMOTTE WALKER, ATTORNEY FOR ROBERT E. LEE JORDAN ET AL., IN OPPOSITION TO SENATE BILLS 1988 AND 2165

From opinions expressed by some of those, conducting this hearing, it would appear that those of us who are in opposition to the proposed bill S. 1988 should apply for a change of venue. We, however, do not believe the opinion and decrees of the Supreme Court in United States v. California (original 12), is fallacious or holds the implications or contain the elements, which the proponents and supporters of bill S. 1988 have alleged and presented to this committee.

It is always well in considering any measure, that first of all, the facts should be discovered and presented, then what laws are applicable, for the purpose of establishing legal rights and interests, if any.

With reference to bill S. 1988, now before the committee, I think it necessary to submit certain facts which are essential to full and fair consideration of the problem of protecting the natural resources of the Nation, which facts do not seem to me to have been disclosed, as a basis for action on the proposed bill. With your patient indulgence, I should like to present some facts and show or point out, if possible, the errors in fact which have been presented to the committee, and which do not sustain the deductions or conclusions which the proponents of the measure place upon them, or justify the forecast of confusion and disaster which will result, by the application of the opinion and decree in United States v. California to the States.

In 1848, that part of the territory, embraced in the action of the United States v. California, was ceded by the Republic of Mexico, under the terms of the Guadaloupe Hidalgo Treaty (vol. IX, U. S. Stat. L. 432), to the United States. This included all of the territory theretofore owned by Mexico, north of the line of the international boundary set by the commissioners, appointed for that purpose. This territory, including the islands offshore, to the west of California's coast line, was ceded, not to the State of California, which did not exist at that time as either State or Territory, but to the United States Government. This was a transfer of all rights, title, and interest in the territory to the Government.

California was admitted into the Union as a State in September 1850 at which time it possessed no land, but by virtue of the Enabling Act, became a sovereign political State, upon its admission. The land within the territory ceded, out of which California was created, contained certain grants made by the Governments of Spain and Mexico to their respective citizens, which, under the terms of the treaty the United States agreed to confirm, upon proof of grant and allowing 2 years within which the grantees were to establish their claims. As a consequence, on March 3, 1851, the Congress passed an act (vol. IX, U. S. Stat. L. 631), which provided in section 13, in part, as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That all lands, the claims to which have been finally rejected by the commissioners in manner herein provided, which shall be finally decided to be invalid by the District or Supreme Court, and all lands the claims to which shall not have been presented to the said Commissioners within 2 years after the date of this act shall be deemed, held and considered as part of the public domain of the United States."

We, therefore, have, first of all, the grant or cession by Mexico of all the land north of the international boundary, which contained the uplands, tide and submerged lands, and the islands off the coast, as well. This act of 1851 provided in the section of the law quoted above that "all lands the claims to which shall not have been presented to the said Commissioners within 2 years after the date of this act shall be deemed, held and considered as part of the public domain of the United States." We have, therefore, an appropriation by Congress of the land, and the taking of title to the whole territory, subject to the claims of the grantees of Spain and Mexico.

The Congress, by legislative act, provided that the new State of California should be granted 500,000 acres (U. S. C. A., title 43, ch. 20, par. 857–665, Doll v. Meacher, 16 Calif. 195), within the boundaries which the State set for itself. But, this grant was subject to certain restrictions in that California was not permitted to select any part of the 500,000 acres until after the territory composing that State had been surveyed by the Government surveyor; and, a further restriction that the selections of sections of land were to be made by the Legislature of the State of California. Brief 5, page 9, 8–9. This resulted in California being without any proprietary interests in any land in the State of California, from the date of its admission in 1850 until after the territory had been surveyed and the legislature had made selections of the land. The records of the Interior Department show that the first grant of land made under the grant of 500,000 acres was patented or certified to the State of California in 1865. Therefore, for 15 years, California had title to no lands within its boundaries and yet was a sovereign political State during all of that period of time. The point that I wish to emphasize is that proprietorship in land was not an essential element of State sovereignty and did not prevent the State functioning as a sovereign State.

The next question in our quest of title is, Did or did not California select any tide, submerged lands or inland waters as a part of the Government's donation of 500,000 acres, for only by selection, after survey, could title be acquired. The Department of the Interior states, under date of August 5, 1942, in a letter addressed to this office, that—

"This office in the past has not knowingly patented to the State of California any land, shown by our records to be tidal or submerged lands, and we do not find any record of any applications for tidelands as swamps and overflowed lands." We, therefore, come to the conclusion that inasmuch as the grant by Congress was limited to 500,000 acres which California was to select through its legislature, and that their selections did not include tidal or submerged lands as any part of the acreage donated to California, California acquired no legal title to the tidal or submerged lands within its boundaries. This is the third step in confirmation of title in the United States.

Under the Constitution, Congress, alone, has the power to dispose of the land of the Government. (U. S. Constitution, art. IV, par. 3). As Congress has not divested the title of the United States in the tidal or submerged lands, or inland waters, by any specific act, title still remains in the United States.

The fourth step in our chain of title—It, therefore, seems certain and beyond reasonable doubt that California did not acquire title to the tide, submerged lands, and inland waters, by virtue of any law covering the disposition of real property of the United States.

It having been shown that the title to the tide, submerged lands, and inland waters, still remains in the Government, and that by the act of 1851, Congress appropriated these lands and made them a part of the public domain. The questions of the alleged rights of California in and to them, have been definitely settled, and the decision of the Supreme Court does not in any way infringe upon her sovereignty with respect to the lands in suit, or the inland waters which were purposely omitted from the action.

The act under which California was granted 500,000 acres of land included the restriction that the selections could only be made after the territory had been surveyed. Further proof that California did not select any tidal or submerged lands will be found in the fact that there has been no survey, up to the present date, of the tidal or submerged lands, and no possible way of acquiring title without having made a selection of surveyed lands. California, thus, is unable to establish a claim of any right, title, or interest in the tidal or submerged lands of California. The recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the United States v. Wyoming, which was decided in June of last year, with reference to the rights of the State of Wyoming in certain unsurveyed lands which Wyoming claims were granted to it under the Enabling Act states:

"The interests of the State vest at the date of its admission into the Union only as to those sections which are surveyed at that time and which previously have not been disposed of by the Federal Government"; citing in support Wisconsin v. Lane (245 U. S. 427), United States v. Stearns Lumber Co. (245 U. S. 436). This finding by the Supreme Court definitely precludes any claim on the part of California to any particular lands or waters under the Enabling Act, and the title to any property in that State could only vest as to property surveyed at the time of the passage of the Enabling Act. To pass title there must be a conveyance, grant, or patent. Nothing passes by implication. (Great Northern Ry. v. United States (32 Fed. Sup. 654), MacDonald v. United States (119 Fed. (2) 821,825)).

Another step in our chain of title is confirmed by the decree of the Supreme Court, in the California case, which is the fact that the Court granted injunctive relief, to restrain the trespassers in California from continuing to drain the oil from the lands owned by the United States. It is hardly necessary for me to state to the eminent counsels for the States that it is impossible to secure an injunction or restraining order, to enjoin trespassers, unless the applicant for the order of injunction is the owner of the property. The Supreme Court, by granting the injunction to the Government to restrain the trespassers in California, was fully aware and advised in the premises that the title was in the United States Government, and so granted the injunction.

There was a further restriction with reference to the donation to the State of California of the 500,000 acres of land, which was set out in U. S. C. A. title 43, chapter 20, paragraph 865, which provided that in granting the land to the State of California, no minerals were included in that grant. It was, therefore, clear, that as far as the sovereignty of the State was concerned, reservations by the Government of minerals in the land donated to California did not in any way affect or destroy the sovereignty of the State. It has previously been shown that the ownership of land was not an essential element in the grant of State sovereignty to California, and to that was added the ownership of minerals in the State. Probably the best distinction between political and sovereign authority was made by Chief Justice Field in the case of Moore v. Shaw (17 Calif. 199), while he was on the bench of the Supreme Court of the State of California. He explains the difference as follows:

"To the existence of this political authority of the State—this qualified sovereignty, or to any part of it—the ownership of the minerals of gold and silver found within her limits is in no way essential. The minerals do not differ from the great mass of property, the ownership of which may be in the United States, or in individuals, without affecting in any respect the political jurisdiction of the States. They may be acquired by the State, as any other property may be, but when thus acquired she will hold them in the same manner that individual proprietors hold their property, and by the same right: by the right of ownership, and not by the right of sovereignty."

It might be well at this point to consider just what sovereign rights could be granted to a new State coming into the Union, under the provisions of the Constitution. What did the Constitution grant to those new States? The Constitution, itself, will be our best guide, and in article IV, section 4, of the Constitution, we find:

"The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of Government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the Legislature or the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence."

Under this provision of the Constitution, there is no guaranty made by the Federal Government of any sovereign or proprietary ownership in any land or a guaranty that each new State shall be on an equal footing with the other States. The equal footing clause appears in the Enabling Act. In the words of that act, with reference to the declaration of the admission, appear these words: "shall be one and is hereby declared to be one of the United States of America, admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the Thirteen Original States in all respects whatsoever." The Thirteen Original States, or Colonies, which formed the Federal Union were each, at the time of entering the Union, owners of all of the territory within their respective borders. They retained their original State ownership of land and their rights or claims to the tide and submerged lands. These rights were not surrendered to the Federal Government as a consideration for joining the Union. The same facts exist with respect to the State of Texas, which was admitted to the Union as a sovereign State and it did not surrender its rights, title, or interest to any part of its land, including tide and submerged lands which formed its southern and eastern boundaries.

Did California, in law or fact, come into the Union on "an equal footing with the Thirteen Original States"? The Statutes at Large disclose that much the same language was used, "on an equal footing," in the Enabling Act, admitting many of the States to the Union regardless of whether or not they were States bordering on the ocean or landlocked States. The words "on an equal footing" surely were not meant to mean that the landlocked States, which had no tide or submerged lands, would have the same rights as the Thirteen Original States in tide and submerged lands of other States.

The rights of the States subsequently formed, and admitted into the Union, under the Constitution, were in no respects similar to the Thirteen Original States and Texas. These new States had no land and most of them had no coast lines. They were not sovereign or independent in themselves at the time of admission, and the powers which were granted to them under the Constitution carried no grant of property upon which to found the claim of ownership of land solely upon the basis of political sovereignty.

The Enabling Act was not a donation of land, a deed to any particular land, or a congressional grant, but on the contrary contained the following provision:

"California is admitted into the Union upon the express condition that the people of the State, through their legislature or otherwise, shall never interfere with the primary disposition of the public land within its limits and shall pass no law and do no act whereby the title of the United States and the rights to dispose of the land shall be impaired, or questioned."

In the light of this provision, a question very properly arises as to whether or not the State of California, since 1929, at least, is living up to the obligations which it assumed under the provisions of the Enabling Act. Has not California violated the provisions of the Enabling Act with reference to the rights of the Government in the public lands? Did it not appear before the Supreme Court, questioning title to certain parts of the territory, which by act of Congress were appropriated to the Federal Government? Has it not been and is it not now issuing leases for the taking of minerals, which it has been the policy of the Government to reserve, without respect to the provisions of the Enabling Act, and to the loss and damage of the Federal Government?

The Enabling Act also provides that:

"Nothing herein contained shall be construed as recognizing or rejecting the propositions tendered by the people of California as articles of compact in the ordinance adopted by the convention which formed the Constitution of that State." (9 Stat. L. 453.)

This unusual provision in the Enabling Act raises a very interesting question as to the validity of any claims which California might make as to property rights, in the State, under the Enabling Act, and that it has no rights which are not covered by the acts of 1841, 1851, and other specified acts relating to grants of property to California. Whether Congress was suspicious of the good faith of California, or not, it was definitely unwilling to go on record by confirming the provisions of its Constitution and ordinances, and certainly failed to do so. This action might even raise the question as to whether or not Congress intended to admit California to statehood on "an equal footing with the original States."

It does not appear that California has any rights to the submerged lands or minerals in them, which can be safely based upon the Enabling Act as being a grant of title to any land within the State.

The act of 1851, hereinbefore referred to (9 Stat. L. 631, sec. 13), provided that after all of the claims to the land within the boundaries of the State had been determined, that all lands "shall be deemed, held, and considered as a part of the public domain of the United States." If we are to aline the facts and the law, the land in California having been declared to be a part of the public domain and the Enabling Act provided that California shall not interfere with the disposal of the public domain, we must conclude that any acts which California has performed on land not selected by its legislature and certified to it by the Government was directly contrary to the provisions of the Enabling Act, of which they were advised and had due and full notice; and they are not now in a position to advance on their own behalf any claims against the Government or to set up any equities which do not conform with the law and the provisions of their admission to statehood.

I think the foregoing fully establishes the title of the United States in the tide and submerged lands and inland waters, and we now consider the law with respect to the leases of the public domain of the United States to its citizens for the development of the natural resources. But, before doing so, it might be well to consider the basis of the claim of the United States Government to ownership of minerals and follow with the policy of the Government in reserving minerals and how long this policy has been followed by the Government and sustained by the Court.

The mining code issued by Spain in 1783, title V, section 1, provides that "mines are the property of my royal crown." When the Spanish Government was succeeded by the Mexican Government, Mexico retained and maintained the same governmental right to the ownership of minerals in Mexico (54 I. D. 363–369). The United States courts have recognized the ownership of minerals by Spain and Mexico, and ruled that the United States succeeded to the Spanish and Mexican rights, at the time the territory, out of which California was created, was ceded to the United States (U. S. v. Castillero (67 U. S. 17), U. S. v. Knight's Admrs. (66 U. S. 227), Chouteau v. Malony (16 How. 203), Boggs v. Merced Min. Co. (14 Calif. 274), 54 I. D. 369–370, Beecher v. Wetherly (97 U. S. 517), Friedman v. Goodwin (Fed. Cas. 5119), U. S. v. Midwest Oil Co. (236 U. S. 479)).

When Congress created the office of Surveyor General to determine the claims of Mexicans and Spaniards to lands in the territory, minerals were expressly excluded (10 Stat. L. 308, sec. 4; 54 I. D. 369–370). No interest in minerals was accessory or incidental to the surface rights included in grants from Spain and Mexico; and that complete and unencumbered title to minerals in the land which was vested formerly in the Mexican Government passed to the United States, upon cession of the territory.

In the case of San Pedro and Cannon del Aqua Co. v. U. S. (1892, 13 S. Ct. 94, 146 U. S. 120) it was held that the paramount title to the mineral lands asserted by the United States was in keeping with the laws of other countries on the same subject and that superior title to mineral lands is in the United States and no State or territorial law can affect in any manner this superior title. That the United States is recognized as the proprietor of the minerals was determined in the case of Gorman Min. Co. v. Alexander (51 N. W. 346, 2 S. D. 557, 563).

In the case of Ivanhoe Min. Co. v. Keystone Consol. Min. Co. (102 U. S. 167) it was held:

"Mineral lands are, by the settled policy of the Government, excluded from all grants; therefore, the grant of the 16 and 36 sections of public lands to the State of California for school purposes made by the act of March 3, 1853 (10 Stat. L. 244), was not intended to cover mineral lands."

Congress, by the act of March 3, 1853 (10 Stat. L. 246), excepted from sale all mineral lands found within the public lands opened by the United States for sale in the State of California. By the act of July 4, 1866 (14 Stat. L. 83), Congress provided in all cases that lands valuable for minerals shall be reserved from sale except as otherwise expressly directed by law. This meant that there could be no sale or disposition of minerals except by an act of Congress.

Mineral lands include not only metalliferous lands but all such as are highly valuable for their deposits of a mineral character (No. Pac. Ry. v. Soderberg (188 U. S. 526) (R. 59)). The term "lands valuable for minerals" also applies to oil and gas deposits (Webb v. American Asphaltum Min. Co., 157 F. 203, 205). The term "minerals" includes petroleum oils and gas (Lovelace v. So. Wes. Petroleum Co., 267 F. 513). The acts of Congress do not reveal that it has altered its policy with respect to the reservation of minerals.

Under the settled policy of the Government, mineral lands, unless expressly included, are excluded from grants to States (Dunbar Lime Co. v. Utah-Idaho Sugar Co., 17 F. (2d) 351; United States v. Sweet, 245 U. S. 563). Under U. S. C. A., title 43, ch. 20, sec. 865, in confirming certain lands selected by California, minerals are specifically reserved (Mullan v. United States, 118 U. S. 271).

The policy of Congress with respect to reservation of minerals was formulated by Congress as early as May 20, 1787. Congress passed an ordinance, with respect to the disposal of lands in the Northwest Territory, which provided in part as follows:

"It is ordered that there shall be reserved one-third part of all gold, silver, lead, and copper mines to be sold or otherwise disposed of, as Congress shall hereafter direct." The deed to be given by the Commissioners of the Land Office, with a clause of reservation in the words of the act.

The mineral recources of the country at that time were little known. Gold and other metals, which were later found in the Northwest, were almost entirely within the domain of France and Spain. The reserve clause of the ordinance of 1787 suggests the reservation as to minerals by way of royalty or sovereign dues, and shows an existing doubt as to whether or not these mines should be leased or sold.

By resolution of April 16, 1800, Congress authorized the President to employ agents to collect information relative to the mineral resources of the country, and on March 3, 1807, Congress, by section 5 of an act for the sale of certain lands in which lead had been discovered, provided that these lands should be reserved for future disposal by the United States, and any grant which might hereafter be made for any land containing a lead mine, from the United States, should be considered fraudulent and null, thereby making it clear that minerals were to be reserved. This act inaugurated the policy of reserving minerals, and leasing lands containing mineral deposits.

On March 25, 1816, Congress passed an act which provided:

"Where a tract of land applied for includes a lead mine or salt spring, no permission to work the same shall be granted without the approbation of the President of the United States."

The House of Representatives on September 8, 1823, asked for information regarding the mining regions of the Northwest. In February 1839, the House of Representatives, by resolution, asked the President to prepare a plan which would show the amount of revenue to be derived from public mineral lands, and their value as public property.

On September 4, 1841, Congress passed an act, section 10 of which provided: "No lands on which are situated any known salines or mines shall be liable to entry under or by virtue of provisions of this act."

On December 2, 1845, President Polk, in his message to Congress, made certain recommendations regarding the reserved mineral land. By act of July 11, 1846, the reserved lead mines were ordered to be exposed for sale under prescribed regulations. Further action was taken on March 1, 1847.

President Fillmore in his annual message of December 2, 1849, said:

"I also beg leave to call your attention to the propriety of extending at an early day our system of land laws, with such modifications as may be necessary, over the State of California and the Territories of Utah and New Mexico. The mineral lands of California, will, of course, form an exception to any general system which may be adopted."

On December 3, 1849, the Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable Thomas Ewing, calling attention of Congress to the discovery of gold in California, said in part:

"The right to the mines of precious metal, which by the laws of Spain remained in the Crown, is believed to have been also retained by Mexico while she was sovereign of the territory and to have passed by her transfer to the United States."

It is a right of the sovereign in the soil as perfect as if it had been expressly reserved in the body of the grant, and it will rest with Congress to determine if, in those cases where lands duly granted contain gold, this right shall be asserted or relinquished. If relinquished, it will require an express law to effect the object, and if retained, legislation will be necessary to provide a mode by which it shall be exercised. For it is to be observed that the regulation permitting the acquisition of a right in the mines by registry or by denouncing was simply a mode of exercising by the sovereign the proprietary right which he had in the treasure as it lay in and was connected with the soil. Thus it appears that the deposits of gold, wherever found in the territory, are the property of the United States. Some legal provision is necessary for the protection and disposition of these mines and it is a matter worthy of much consideration how they should be disposed of so as best to promote the public interest and encourage individual enterprise. (Executive Documents, 3d sess., 46th Cong. 1880–81, vol. 25, p. 309).

The act of September 27, 1850, creating the office of surveyor general of Oregon and providing for surveys and donation of lands to settlers directs: "that no mineral lands or lands reserved for salines shall be liable to any claim under and by virtue of the provisions of that act."

All of these acts by Congress would indicate that from 1785 to 1850 there had been a very definite policy on the part of the Government to reserve minerals in the public domain.

California was admitted to the Union in September 1850. The conditions under which California was admitted and the plan for the disposal of the public land was different in California from other States. The constitutional convention held by Californians in 1849 discussed the question of the boundaries of the State and also minerals. The report of the debates in the constitutional convention are set out in a volume entitled "California Constitutional Convention, 1949." (Debates, compiled by J. Ross Browne, and published in Washington in 1850.) In discussing the question of education for the children and providing for a fund for education, it was suggested that these funds might be raised by having the school lands located in mining areas. Mr. Hoppe, on page 351, states: "Our Government has always reserved the mineral lands, and we have every reason to believe that the mineral lands of California will also be reserved."

On page 464, Mr. McCarver states: "I am in favor of any proposition that asks that the gold mines shall be granted to California; but I do not, at the same time, believe that Congress would be so likely to relinquish the gold mines as they would the public lands in any other part of the country."

On page 465, Mr. Sherwood states with reference to a resolution in relation to the public lands: "I shall vote against this resolution. I think these lands belong to the Government of the United States. They cost the General Government $15,000,000 and although it may be very well for us to ask Congress to grant them to the State of California, inasmuch as she has no appropriation for the support of a government, I think we cannot say that of right they belong to California."

Other sentiments of the same character were expressed and indicate clearly that the Californians were at the time of the Constitutional Convention aware of the policy of the Government in reserving minerals, that they had no right to ask the Government for a grant of the minerals to the State, and they had no desire to oppose the established policy of the Government with respect to the reservation of minerals.

Another point is that the act of March 3, 1853, definitely made a reservation of minerals in California. It might be well, in order to save the time of the committee, that certain provisions of that act as set out in the finding of the Court in Ivanhoe Min. Co. v. Consolidated Min. Co., (1880) 102 U. S. 167, be cited.

The twelfth section grants to the State 72 sections for the use of a seminary of learning to be selected by the governor or someone appointed by him, in legal subdivisions of not less than a quarter-section, or any unsold, unoccupied, and unappropriated public lands;

"Provided, That no mineral lands or lands reserved for any public purpose whatever, or lands to which any settler may be entitled, under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to such selection."

The eighteenth section also grants the State 10 sections of land for the purpose of erecting the public buildings of the State, with the same proviso as the one to section 12.

The proviso to the third section is also relied upon as indicative of the purpose of Congress in regard to the minerals of California. That section contains the authority under which the surveyor general is to act in surveying the public lands in that State, and, after investing him with the powers conferred on other surveyors-general, and some specific directions for the survey of private land claims, it is "Provided, That none other than township lines shall be surveyed where the lands are mineral, or are deemed unfit for cultivation; and no allowance shall be made for such lines as are not actually run and marked on the field, and were actually necessary to be run."

It is strongly urged by plaintiff's counsel that the language of the granting clause import a grant in praesenti, and that wherever by any survey of the Government thereafter made the location of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of a township was ascertained, it establishes the title in the State from the date of the statute, namely: March 3, 1853.

It is quite unnecessary to enter upon this question, which has been before us in so many shapes; for, if it be conceded that such would be the effect of the statute if there were no words of exception in the grant, Congress has in nearly every case where the question has arisen made such specific exceptions to the operation of the grant as to decide the matter without resort to the rule of construction asserted by plaintiffs.

During this period, however, from 1849 to 1866, the system of the disposition of the public lands, in general, had to be introduced into California, and grants of land were made to the State for various purposes, also to railroad companies; and in all this the attention of Congress was, necessarily, turned to the distinction between mineral lands and the ordinary agricultural lands of the other Western States to which similar laws had applied. This distinction is nowhere more plainly manifested than in this act of 1853. As we have said in Sherman v. Buick (93 U. S., 209 (XXIII, 849)), the main purpose of that act was to provide for the survey and sale of the public lands and for the right of preemption to the settler on these lands; and there was embraced in this clause of preemption the grant of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections to the State for school purposes. In the very sentence which contains this grant in parentheses, and while introducing the new principle, that the public lands should be subject to the right of preemption, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, the mineral lands are excepted, in express terms, from this right and from public sale.

We say that this introduced a new principle in preemption law, for, except in a very few cases, no right of preemption had before existed until the lands were surveyed, so that the preemptor could designate, by the description of the congressional survey, the precise land to which his preemption attached.

But, this right of preemption on unsurveyed lands was, by this statute, to last but 1 year; and so careful was Congress to protect mineral lands from sale and from preemption that, as we have already shown by the proviso to section 3 of the act, the surveyors were forbidden to extend their surveys over mineral lands.

The effect of this was as Congress intended it should be, that as no surveys could be made of mineral lands until further order of Congress, there could be no sale, preemption, or other title acquired in mineral lands until Congress had provided by law for their disposition. The purpose of these provisions was, undoubtedly, to reserve these lands, so much more valuable than ordinary public lands, and the nature of which suggested a policy different from other lands in their disposal, for such measures in this respect as the more matured wisdom of that body, which by the Constitution is authorized to dispose of the territory or other property of the United States, should afterward devise.

It is a strong corroboration of this view that Congress, in the section (12) of this same statute giving the State 72 sections for a seminary of learning, declares that no mineral lands shall be taken under the grant for the erection of public buildings in the State.

We find a similar provision in the grant to the Pacific railroad companies, whose road it was known would pass through some of these mineral regions. By the 4th section of the act of 1864, 13 Stat. L. 356, it is declared that neither that act nor the act of 1862, 12 Stat. L. 489, shall be held to include in the grant "any Government reservation or mineral lands or the improvements of any bona fide settler on any lands returned or denominated mineral lands."

Taking into consideration what is well known to have been the hesitation and difficulty in the minds of Congressmen in dealing with these mineral lands, the manner in which the question was suddenly forced upon them, the uniform reservation of them from survey, from sale, from preemption, and, above all, from grants, whether for railroads, public buildings, or other purposes, and looking to the fact that from all the grants made in this act they are reserved, one of which is for school purposes, besides the 16th and 36th sections, we are forced to the conclusion that Congress did not intend to depart from its uniform policy in this respect in the grant of those sections to the State.

The Oil Land Leasing Act of 1920 (41 Stat. L. 437) was passed for the purpose of enabling citizens of the United States to secure leases on land containing oil and other minerals for the purpose of development. The first paragraph of the Oil Land Leasing Act provides as follows:

"That deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas in lands containing such deposits owned by the United States * * * shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States."

I wish to call particular attention to the fact that the Leasing Act covers the mineral resources of the Nation regardless of their location, provided the deposits are in lands owned by the United States. The opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, in view of the finding that California did not own the lands or oil, that the Leasing Act did not apply, because the deposits were in submerged lands, which are owned by the United States, is subject to a question of good faith on the part of the Secretary of the Interior in so ruling.

This committee has been advised that the litigation initiated by the Attorney General against the State of California was induced or caused by "ambitious applicants," with innuendos as to the standing of the attorneys which represented these claimants. It has been my privilege to represent a client whose interest is that of a patriotic citizen who has maintained that the title to the submerged lands was in the Government and subject to the provisions of the Leasing Act of 1920, as amended, and who has complied with all of the rules and regulations issued by the Department of the Interior, and whose application has been held up by the Department of the Interior since 1937, which Department refused to act upon his applications until there had been a court determination as to the title.

In view of the facts which have been heretofore presented to this committee, it may be understandable why the Secretary of the Interior had cause to question his earlier decision as to the ownership of the tide and submerged lands. In 1942, a suit was filed against the Secretary of the Interior, setting out, generally, the facts which appear in this statement, and in addition, a request that the Court direct the Secretary of the Interior to issue a lease to the applicant for that portion of the outer harbor of Long Beach where the applicant had filed his location, he being the first person who had made a filing in that particular section, which was on an unknown geological structure. This suit was unsuccessful, as one of the provisions of the Oil Land Leasing Act, which should be altered, provided that these leases were to be issued at the discretion of the Secretary. The applicant was without recourse by virtue of this provision of the act, the case was not considered on its merits.

It is believed that the facts as presented in that suit were, at least, one of the reasons which led the Secretary to urge the filing of a suit by the Government to determine the question of ownership of the oil, and as a result a suit was filed in California which was subsequently dismissed and the action known as United States v. California, original 12, was filed in the Supreme Court.

The complaint filed by the Government was so unrealistic, purporting, as it did, to represent the interests of the Government and the rights of the people under the law, that a motion was filed asking leave to intervene in this action, upon the grounds that the interests of the United States were not covered by the allegations of the complaint, and that the prayer of the complaint did not ask for an adjudication of ownership of the submerged lands and also failed to ask for an accounting, and damages from the trespassers who have been draining the oil from Government lands since 1937. The complaint alleged that the Government was the owner in fee of the lands, but excluded any claims to the inland waters of the State, and asked for injunctive relief. The Supreme Court denied the application for leave to intervene and a petition was filed, as amicus curiae, setting out the principal objections to the complaint of the Government and supplying certain evidence and citations of law which, the opinion and the decree of the Court indicate, were considered by the Court, as revealed in its finding, under which it states:

"The State of California has no title thereto or property interests therein."

The opinion of the Court was handed down on the 23d day of June 1947 and on July 26, 1947, the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Interior entered into two stipulations with the attorney general of California purporting to disclaim the interests of the United States to the State of California in certain lands in California. For the purpose of transferring the oil deposits of the State of California in those locations, the Attorney General, by the simple expedient of a red pencil, drew a line on a map from near Point Fermin to a spot on the coast in the southeastern part of the city of Long Beach, and thought that by drawing this line, he had created a bay and made it inland waters of the State. This would enable the State of California to claim the oil deposits in the harbor of Long Beach, in which the applicant, represented by this speaker, had located his claim. The applicant, on September 3, filed a brief, as amicus curiae, asking the Supreme Court to vacate the two stipulations on the grounds that:

1. The Attorney General and the Secretary of the Interior were without statutory authority to bind the United States by any stipulations or agreements purporting to alienate or surrender title to or dominion over any part of the submerged lands belonging to the Federal Government or the oil in them.

2. That the stipulations are contrary to public policy and the provisions of the Oil Land Leasing Act of 1920, as amended.

3. That the stipulations are contrary to the opinion of the Supreme Court, and in contempt thereof.

4. That the petitioner has a substantial, lawful, interest in the subject matter of the two stipulations, which deny to him his rights under the Oil Land Leasing Act of 1920, as amended.

Shortly after the decree of October 1947 was entered, California filed a motion asking for a rehearing and reconsideration of the majority opinion, to which the applicant filed a brief, as amicus curiae, in opposition to the motion for a rehearing and reconsideration of the majority opinion, upon the grounds that California failed to establish any rights in title to, or ownership of, the submerged lands off the coast of California or to the oil or minerals in them, and set out the failure on the part of California to have presented in its petition for rehearing any of the essential facts showing title necessary to justify the Court to rehear or reconsider its judgment. The Court denied the petition for rehearing and reconsideration of the majority opinion filed by the State of California.

On the 29th day of January 1948 the Attorney General filed a petition asking for a supplemental decree delimiting certain sections of the coast of California, and among them he sought the approval of the Court to the alienation of that tract of land, enclosed in his pencil-made bay, which, under his stipulation, he disclaimed to the State of California. To this petition, the applicant again filed a brief, as amicus curiae, calling attention to the lack of authority on the part of the Attorney General to alienate the land of the United States and to give away or surrender the interests of the United States in what is generally recognized as being the largest oil pool on the west coast. The Court, so far, has not acted upon the petition of the Attorney General.

I have briefly sketched the fight in the Supreme Court which has been made by a citizen of the United States in an effort to protect the interests of the United States for the benefit of the Nation. The fight has been made personally by the applicant, who represents only himself, and he has borne all the expenses in the litigation.

It is unfortunate that the petition of the Government was not so drawn as to limit the points to be submitted to the Supreme Court so that they applied specifically to the claims of the Government against the State of California. It is also interesting to note that in the presentation of the case that nowhere did the speaker find in the briefs submitted by the Government, or the briefs submitted by the State of California, the word "oil." Yet, this suit was brought primarily to determine the ownership of oil in the submerged lands and had it not been for the inquiries on the part of the Justices, the real purposes of the action would have never been presented to the Court in the arguments. The reason for the presentation of the case in the form it was submitted is conjectural, but the subsequent happenings have little doubt in the minds of those who followed the case that all was not well.

I should like, briefly, to speak of the opinion and decree of the Court. Objections have been raised by the proponents of bill 1988 to the lack of a definite ruling on the question of ownership. I do not find these objections as carrying any weight or as being well founded. The Court was advised in the premises that all of the territory ceded by Mexico belonged to the United States Government. The Court was advised of the acts of 1841, 1851, and 1853. They were also advised as to the mineral reservation; they had just passed upon the case of United States v. Wyoming, with respect to the rights of the State in land which is unsurveyed and the fact that the State acquired no title to any land which is unsurveyed at the date of its admission into the Union. With these facts before the Court, it really does not seem that it is necessary for the Court to make any further declaration as to the title, and I would say that they were perfectly justified in letting the matter rest.

The committee has been told that the decree of the Supreme Court stating that the Government had paramount interest in the land cover [illegible] by the complaint and the statement by the Court that the rights and interest of the Government transcends ordinary property rights establish a new principle of property law. This opinion, as expressed by the proponents of bill 1988, is based upon something other than the facts in the case. The attorneys general of the various States have been misled into believing that California had certain rights and title to the tidal, submerged lands, and inland waters, and that this ruling of the Supreme Court would deprive California of those rights, and that an extension of the principle enunciated by the Court would place in jeopardy similar property in their respective States. When, however, the facts are revealed, and it is established that California had no title or rights in the property in suit, the theory falls to the ground, as being without foundation.

The use of the word "transcends" by the Supreme Court has also caused many of the proponents of Senate bill 1988 alarm and worry, but that, I think, is due to the fact that they are not entirely familiar with the pleadings and other briefs which have been filed in this case, and which were used by the Court in arriving at its decision. The facts definitely prove that California had no title and the Supreme Court evidently felt that it was unnecessary to include a definite statement of ownership in the decree as Congress had already appropriated the land by the act of 1851. It is not difficult to understand why the attorneys general of the various States were misled by the failure of the Court to definitely state that title is in the Government, and that power transcending ownership or the rights, which the Attorney General had asked this Court to pass upon, as revealed in the prayer of the complaint. A superior title transcends an inferior title. I can only reason that in order to reach those rights which are superior to ownership, I must pass through ownership to reach something which transcends it, and that, of course, is the superior power of the Government in all matters relating to its functions. The idea of paramount power has also been suggested as being something new and probably is to some of the attorneys general, but should not be so to the attorney general of the State of California, for in the case Doran v. Central Pacific Ry. Co. (24 Cal. 245), it was held "the General Government does not hold its land as a mere private proprietor, but its control and power of alienation and disposition of the land are uncontrolled, save by the Constitution of the United States, alone." This is the same doctrine which was enunciated by the Supreme Court in this case, and fully explains its position and reaffirms the paramount power of the Government.

It appears from all of the statements made by the various witnesses before this committee that they have all labored under a misconception of the facts and the law, produced largely by the most excellent and extravagant campaign of propaganda which I have ever seen, and primarily for the purpose of injecting into the decree of the United States Supreme Court of property-law principles which do not and cannot exist under the facts.

The purpose of this whole propaganda of misinformation is fully revealed by the stipulations. Since 1920, all oil operators, from the little wildcatter to the Standard Oil Co., drilling in Government-owned land, have been subject to the provisions of the Leasing Act and the accumulations of wealth by these great corporations and the little independent operator were derived by all observing the law. The little independent wildcatter could be sure of getting his permit, if he made a discovery and filed upon it, just the same as the oil company.

The stipulation referred to is not revealing and is contrary to the established principles of the Leasing Act. The territory basically in dispute was filed upon by an independent wildcatter under the Leasing Act. If the Leasing Act was held to apply, then the oil companies, under leases granted by California to steal the oil by whipstocking, would be enjoined by virtue of the decree of the Supreme Court and California would lose the royalty. There was only one way to defeat the lawful applicant and protect California and that was by declaring the Leasing Act not to apply to deposits of minerals in public domain, which happened to be in submerged lands, and this is what was done by agreement between counsel for the Government, the Secretary of the Interior, and the attorney general of California.

If the Leasing Act applied, the little fellow would get his chance, and lease, and the Government get the royalty. If the Leasing Act could be held not to apply, the Secretary of the Interior could cancel him out, which was just what he did. If the oil pool could be put in inland waters by making a bay with a red pencil, then California could claim the oil, and this procedure was supposed to give the Attorney General and Secretary of the Interior an out, so they could not be held to account by the people of the Nation. It must also be noted that the Attorney General has, for nearly a year, failed to enjoin the trespassers in the interest of the Government.

Honorable Senators and Congressmen, do or can you lend your support to a bill which is based upon these facts? Are you not revolted and disgusted at having been led into such a trap, in the name of the States' rights upon the mistaken idea that the Government was taking away property from California, which it had a title to, when California never had the vestige of a claim?

It was entirely unnecessary for the Supreme Court to make a specific finding declaring ownership, notwithstanding the fact that I submitted a petition suggesting certain additions to the decree, fearing just what had occurred; that is, an entire misunderstanding of the decree by most of the attorneys general of the various States, who have feared an extension of a policy which I hope I have made more understandable. I do not feel that the Court has inaugurated a new principle with respect to property rights, by its decree. It applies only to Government-owned property, in which the Government has paramount rights.

I do not wish, however, to be misunderstood as to the effect of the decree on property in any State, in which the State does not have title. Only those States which are without title have any cause for uneasiness and that uneasiness can only result in the fact that they have long been on notice of their lack of title, and if they have proceeded upon the theory that the Government is restrained by laches, prescriptions, as adverse possessions, they have only themselves to blame, as is everybody else, who is amenable to law.

I would suggest to those attorneys general who have relied upon the rule of Pollard v. Hagan (3 How. 212), to reread the case with particular reference to the case City of Mobile v. Eslava (16 Peters 234), and to note that the United States was not a party in the Pollard case, and that the land in suit had by act of Congress been previously transferred to the city of Mobile, Ala. The United States had neither title nor interest in the property and what was said by the Supreme Court in that case could or would not be binding upon the United States Government and must be regarded as pure dictum. Alabama certainly must have felt that the titles to the underwater lots were owned by the Government, otherwise there would have been no request for an act of Congrsss transferring them to Alabama. In the case in the Supreme Court, this fact was called to the attention of the Court, and it is believed that the expression of opinion made by the Supreme Court in that case considered the points raised in the brief filed by the Speaker.

In passing, I only wish to maintain that in the fifty-odd cases in the Supreme Court which are supposed to be based upon the Pollard case, that in only one or two of them was the United States a party, and that the judgment or decree of the Court in those cases did not bind the United States for that reason, and that the citation of all of those various cases by the proponents of bill 1988 are inapplicable in the California case, where there is no title as a foundation to the action, and the citations do not bind those who are not parties to the action.

In the California case the Government eliminated inland waters from the action, and went further in its brief to include harbors, bays, navigable rivers, etc., all without statutory or congressional authority. Please note the attempt made by the Attorney General, under the provision of one of the stipulations, to transfer to California, by the expedient of creating a bay by drawing a line upon a map, to give to California the largest oil pool on the coast, upon the grounds that he had made this particular segment of the coast inland waters. The Supreme Court in the past has handed down a number of opinions and decrees with respect to the ownership by various States of the inland waters in those States. However, these opinions and decrees, so holding, in many instances lack the essence of legal basis to confirm a grant of title. No title can be acquired by any State admitted to the Union under the Constitution by judicial decree or upon the basis or claim of State sovereignty, unless the inland waters have by specific act of Congress been conveyed to the State. The States admitted under the Constitution are restricted in their ownership of land within their boundaries by grants made them by Congress. Nothing passes by implication. All opinions and decrees to the contrary notwithstanding. MacDonald v. United States (119 Fed. 2, 821–825). The failure of the Attorney General to include inland waters in the California litigation does not, by its omission, transfer the inland waters not so granted to the defendant State.

The State of California realized that it did not own the tidal, submerged lands and inland waters, or at least did not own the minerals which might be found in them is confirmed by the action of the California Legislature in 1929, chapter 536, of the statutes of that State, which prohibited any State official or subdivision, or officials thereof, from granting any leases to drill upon the tidelands, either filled or unfilled, submerged lands, overflowed lands, or beds of navigable rivers, or lakes, and by so doing to extract mineral therefrom. I am quite sure that this committee and the attorneys general of the various States who have appeared before this committee had not been advised of the existence of this legislation, prior to appearing here.

Governor Warren of California stated to this committee:

"So far as my State is concerned, the oil issue is a minor one compared with other fundamental rights which are infringed." In view of the royalties of $3,000,000 a year which the State of California receives and has been receiving since 1938, I was surprised to hear the Governor state that the oil issue was a minor one. It has been established that California has no title or rights in any land which was not selected by it out of the 500,000-acre grant or conveyed by specific act of Congress; there is, therefore, nothing left in the way of property rights in California that can be infringed. On this point, the State of California may rest at ease. The oil being a minor issue may well be dismissed.

I fully appreciate that this committee and the Congress desire to pass legislation which will protect natural resources of the Nation in accordance with the policy which has been the rule since 1787. I feel quite sure that this committee will, regarding the best interests of the United States, make such recommendation to the Congress as will be in the interests of its citizens at large, and assume the responsibility of conserving natural resources for the advancement of our National welfare. I feel sure that they wish to preserve the laws which have been passed by Congress for the development of natural resources. I am sure that they desire to protect all citizens of the United States who have, under its laws, cooperated in the development of the natural resources of the country. I feel sure that, upon reflection, this committee is not going to recommend the giving and granting away of the property of the United States without having made a careful study of the interests of the United States in maintaining and controlling its property and resources. I feel quite certain that this committee desires to see that every State retains all of the property to which it has a legal right to hold and that no cloud be placed upon its titles. I also feel sure that this committee and the Congress will hold to account those who have knowingly violated the law or have slept upon their rights under any theory of laches upon the part of the Government. I also feel sure that this committee and those who prepared bill 1988, as expounded by the proponents, believe that the only solution to this problem is by quitclaiming to the States all rights of the Government to the marginal belt of the sea extending from low-water mark to the 3-mile limit, the tidelands, all navigable rivers, lakes, filled in or overflowed lands. Can the question be resolved by such action?

But, gentleman of the committee, there may be other ways by which these questions can be resolved in accordance with existing law and in conformity with the declaration of the Supreme Court in the California case, and there is a precedent for such a plan which has heretofore been acted upon by the Congress. As you have been advised, the development of the natural resources of minerals has been covered by the Leasing Act of 1920, as amended. This act provided that all resources in land owned by the Government was subject to lease by any citizen of the United States who was qualified to develop the properties and pay the Government a portion of the recovery, as royalty. In California, alone, under an act of the legislature of 1938 (State Land Act, 52d Leg., chap. 5), was license given by the State, so the oil companies could extend their drills from the uplands out into the tidelands and the ocean, and take oil from the bed of the ocean which did not belong to the State of California; but was definitely known by the State of California to belong to the Federal Government.

California has a law against whipstocking or slant-drilling, which is as you know, the slanting of the drill away from the perpendicular and extending into lands other than those of the owner. The California law provides that a man drilling for oil is confined to the boundaries of his own land and that if he accidentally or purposely slants his well into the land of another, he becomes a trespasser and liable in damages to the man whose land is invaded. In California, alone, does there seem to be a dual moral standard. It is unlawful for an individual to direct his drill outside of his own land, but the State of California has given licenses to the oil companies and independent operators to steal Government oil, so long as the drilling commences upon the uplands. This theft has continued from 1938 up to June 23, 1947. How many millions of barrels of oil have been extracted from the reserve of the United States Government would probably be difficult to discover. The value of that oil probably runs into billions. It is estimated by oilmen that there is still a reserve in the Long Beach Harbor area of at least 750,000,000 barrels of oil. Do you, gentlemen, in view of the world situation, in view of the needs for a reserve for national defense, the requirements of our domestic economy, wish to make a gift of those resources to one who has received all of the royalties from the oil extracted from 1938 to 1947? Are you, gentlemen, unfamiliar with the equity doctrine—that he who seeks equity must come into court with clean hands?

The attorneys general and representatives of the various States which have appeared before this committee have emphasized the amounts which their respective States have invested in improvements in their marginal seas, tidelands, inland waters, etc., and the State of California, in particular, has presented to the committee a full report on their expenditures for improvement. This committee probably has not seen the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, for the year 1944, in which it appears that from 1940 to 1944, if the total which I read on the expenditures of Government funds through the Army engineers is correct, harbors, breakwaters, flood control, rivers, and other improvements for the State of California amounted to over a half-billion dollars. This report only extends to the year 1944, and further expenditures have been made since that time. I have not secured from the Navy Department the expenditures made by them for docks, warehouses, and other installations in connection with the war since 1940, but I fancy they will reach a sizable amount.

I would suggest that the committee, before agreeing to the proposals of bill 1988, give consideration to the amount which the taxpayers of this country have expended through the Congress, that an investigation be made as to how much public money has been expended in internal improvements in the various States of the Union. This, I should think, would impress the committee with the fact that the taxpayers have definitely to be considered in the making of any gift by quitclaiming or otherwise, which is going to place upon them the raising of the additional amount which will be required to meet the deficit caused by a voluntary surrender of the proceeds under the Leasing Act. It seems to me that if the natural resources are to be quitclaimed, that all of the public lands in all of the States should likewise be quitclaimed, and we could then dispose of the Department of the Interior, which would reduce governmental expense in a sizable amount. Why should the Congress be niggardly in its gifts, as it owns some public land in nearly every State.

Another point I wish to make, in which California stands almost alone among the oil-producing States, is that there has been, in the past, an effort to conserve the oil deposits, to limit the amount of oil which can be withdrawn from the wells. California refused to join this oil compact, and the oil companies in California operating under State and municipal leases have been as busy as cats, extracting all the oil they possibly could from the Government-owned land, knowing that it could not last long and they were going to get all they could while the getting was good. I firmly believe that this policy was adopted because California knew it had no title to the land being drained and no rights in the oil being stolen, but on which they have exacted royalties since 1938.

There are no grounds for the fears expressed by the talented witnesses who have appeared before this committee that the decree of the Supreme Court in the California case is going to take away from the States any property to which they have title. The decree refers to the paramount right of the Government in property which the Government owns. The disinclination of the Supreme Court to make a direct finding of ownership is not due to the lack of ownership, which has been established; but I believe, in part to the form of the prayer of the Attorney General who failed to frame the Government's case in such a way as to get the rights and ownership of the marginal belt properly before the Court for adjudication. Eminent domain and condemnation proceedings are the actions of the Government and States, when they take the property of others and compensation is paid, but when you own the property you don't resort to such proceedings, you merely exercise your constitutional rights, and laches, prescription, adverse possession, or estoppel in pais do not run against the Government or your respective States. This is also the law in California. Patton v. City of Los Angeles (169 Cal. 521).

The question of title to the lands, tidal, submerged, under beds of navigable waters, lakes, etc., is really not vital, so long as the minerals, including gas and oil, are reserved in the Government. The natural resources of the Nation must be held intact, for the benefit of all, and no congressional action should be taken by or under which these most valuable assets of the people are to be dissipated and removed from the control of the Government, in such times as we are now facing. A wise policy of conservation has been established and maintained for a hundred years. It has proven itself so, and I believe Congress is not going to be stampeded by the false alarm which has brought so many of the Governors and attorney generals of the States here, as witnesses, to protest against a decision of the Supreme Court which can and does apply only to land owned by the Government, which takes no property away from any State which owns it.

It is my belief that the Nation is required to maintain and continue its policy of conservation of its natural resources and particularly oil, which is most vital at the present time; that the United States should not surrender its title to the property which it owns, but should continue, under existing laws, its policy of leasing. It is my opinion that the policy adopted by Congress on April 5, 1926, should be followed. This was an act contained in chapter 106 of the Sixty-ninth Congress, whereby the Board of Supervisors of Santa Barbara County, Calif., made an application for a lease of a part of the beach of Santa Barbara, Calif., for the purpose of creating a recreation ground. The board of supervisors was unwilling to expend any funds for the improvement of the beach because the Government owned the beach tidelands. Congress, therefore, gave them a permit to use the beach free, so long as the beach was maintained (ch. 106, 69th Cong., April 5, 1926):

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, upon application of the Board of Supervisors of Santa Barbara County, Calif., to issue to such board, for the benefit of such county, a free permit authorizing the use, improvement, and maintenance of all that portion of northeast quarter, etc., lying south of the main slough as its northern boundary, such area being approximately 24 acres, for a free public bathing beach, under conditions which will allow the fullest use of the land for recreational purposes. Such permit shall remain in full force and effect as long as the county complies with the conditions therein and maintains such lands as a free bathing beach.

"Such lands shall not be subject to the mining laws of the United States, in the absence of an express order of the Secretary of the Interior restoring the land to such laws with such restrictions and limitations as the said Secretary may prescribe."

I am advised that the Secretary of the Interior in making the lease reserved the mineral rights in the tract granted.

It is my thought that each State, knowing well what it owns, as tidelands, submerged lands, inland waters, navigable rivers, lakes, etc., may apply to the Government for a permit or lease to use all properties on Government land, free, and the Congress can give them such a right so long as the properties are maintained by the various States reserving only the mineral rights. This plan will affect no title, will cause neither confusion nor pandemonium, as has been suggested; will maintain the rights of the Government in its land, will control the development of its natural resources and the rights of its citizens under laws passed by Congress, and sustain their belief that Congress will act in the interests of the Nation.

The Attorney General, in his remarks and in answer to questions put to him by the committee, stated he was going to protect the interests of the Government and the rights of the people. Let us for a moment examine his record in the California case.

I have previously mentioned the peculiar way in which this litigation was framed and that I had filed six briefs in this suit, by leave of the Supreme Court. After the opinion of the Court was handed down, and within a very short time thereafter, he and the Secretary of the Interior entered into two stipulations, the one alienating territory of the United States, and the other continuing State leases.

In order to protect the interests of the Government, he selected the greatest known oil pool on the coast, and disclaimed any interest of the United States in it, in favor of California. This was done on the theory that the inland waters belong to the State. As this particular bit of coast was in the open sea, it had to be made into a bay in order to make a prima facie case of regularity. Did the giving away or disclaiming of this oil pool to California represent his idea of protecting the Government and the interests of the people?

My client and about 600 other citizens of the United States, after securing legal advice, were convinced that the Government owned the submerged lands off the coast of California, and complying with the regulations of the Leasing Act of 1920, as amended, filed applications for permits to develop oil and gas, which they thought might be found in the marginal belt. It was, and is believed that the Leasing Act applied to this submerged land. If this act did apply then these citizens were entitled to permits and leases. This idea did not work out to the benefit of California, so some way had to be found by and under which these applications could be canceled, and the only way to protect the oil companies under their State leases, was to declare the submerged land not to be a part of the public domain. This, Secretary Krug has done, and his ruling was approved by the Attorney General. The interests of the applicants were thrown out of the window in order that California and the oil companies could be taken care of and time granted for congressional action. (See second stipulation.) You will also note in the decree that both these stipulations were stricken.

The idea of forgiving the trespassers, was not what was done to the Standard Oil Co. It is not the decision in the Wyoming Case. Does this forgiveness indicate a zeal for the rights of the Nation by an attorney General acting in good faith? When one acts in good faith, forgiveness can be considered. This is what the Wyoming Case has to say of good faith:

"An agreed premise is found in the rule that one who 'willfully' or 'in bad faith' trespasses on the land of another, and removes minerals, is liable to the owner for their full value computed as of the time the trespasser converted them to his own use, by sale or otherwise, but then an 'innocent' trespasser, who has acted 'in good faith', may deduct from such value the expenses of extraction. It is also clear that when suit is brought for the value of minerals wrongfully removed from the plaintiff's land, and the trespass and conversion are established, the burden of pleading and proving good faith is on the defendant. The 'good faith' contemplated by these rules is something more than the trespasser's assertion of a colorable claim to the converted minerals."

The Oil Land Leasing Act provides for the scale of royalties to be paid the Government for the granting of a lease. Why is not the Leasing Act good enough to be applied to the deposits of oil in land owned by the United States in California? Why does a new bureaucratic bureau have to be set up for California with added expenditures? Why should California benefit when the evidence of her bad faith is so patent in licensing the stealing of Government oil in the public domain? Why should the reclamation States suffer the loss of revenue for roads, schools, etc., just because it has been suggested by the oil companies and California, that it be given to California? Under what theory of protecting the interests of the Government do we pay gratuities to trespassers? No, gentlemen of the committee, this action against California was brought, in my opinion, with the idea that it should be lost by the Government. By the efforts of amicus curiae, the true facts were presented to the Supreme Court and it was won; the prayer for relief was so drawn as to make it possible for confusion to arise and it has arisen just as was intended.

Title to the marginal belt was not determined by the decree in this case. Title was granted by Congress. The restrictions on the transfer of property were made by congressional action. This question was entirely in the hands of Congress, which passed the laws creating California. It is my considered opinion, that whatever claims other States, which came into the Union under the Constitution and their respective enabling acts, may have, California has no such claim or rights. I believe that the States whose enabling acts actually confirmed their boundaries and made claims to inland waters, that the threat of suits by the Attorney General are idle threats and any such suit can be defeated.

As to the marginal belt, this suit, being based upon ownership by congressional appropriation of the territory, and the failure of California to select the lands in suit under the acts of Congress, making the grants; other suits against the States would not be maintainable if the lands were not owned by the United States. As the lands in the 13 original States and Texas were never owned by the United States, the decision in the California case would apply only to lands owned by the Government, and certainly not to land or waters, never owned.

The paramount powers and dominion, in the instant case, refers to land owned by the Government. The powers are in keeping with international law, for the purpose of navigation, defense, and national development. The fact, the opinion of the Court said, that the Thirteen Original States did not establish ownership of their marginal belt, does not estop or preclude those States from establishing their ownership, which I believe they can. It is not a final adjudication.

The Secretary of the Interior made one remark which is very pertinent to the matter before this Committee. In answering a question as to the finding of former Secretary Ickes that the State owned the submerged lands, he said, "Secretary Ickes had no right to make such a decision." I wish to point out that the Secretary of the Interior is in the same position with reference to his ruling that the Leasing Act does not apply to submerged lands and that they are not a part of the public domain, when Congress appropriated them in 1851.

The Attorney General stated no legislation was needed in this matter. I agree. The Leasing Act has served the Nation well. It is sufficient today. It is the expression of the will of the people through Congress which established the Mineral Reservation Policy in 1787. I think it unfortunate so few have appeared before this Committee in support of the law as it exists, and who might wish to maintain the integrity of law and the rights, which are believed to be possessed, under them. We do not believe the Bill of the Administration represents anything but a private, questionable, agreement between the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General of California, for the benefit of California and the oil companies. It is not in the interests of the Government or its citizens, or in accordance with existing applicable law.

We are also opposed to bill 1988. We think it inequitable, in that it purports to grant favors to certain States to the loss of others. We cannot agree that the proposed bill is not a donation of Government assets without due consideration of the rights of other States and the welfare of the people. Suppose you quitclaim the inland waters of the States, what will you do about the Commerce Clause, the Power Commission; will you change the Constitution and repeal the laws? These matters must be most seriously weighed. You might find your bill declared unconstitutional. It is definitely against public policy and against the interests of the Nation.

An investigation of the provisions of the Enabling Acts, alone, can determine what Congress gave each State and if title, rights, and ownership were granted to them, there is no reason to give them back; for they already have them; and, if they did not receive these grants, the acts of Congress will disclose the reasons and specific legislation for each, granting such relief as may be desirable, may be enacted.

My opinion as to the meaning of that portion of the opinion contained in the last sentence of the next to the last paragraph, that Congress will not execute its powers in such a way as to bring about injustices to States, is that any damage which may result, such as a claim based upon good faith, would be subject to congressional action for relief, and is not an invitation for Congress to override the opinion of the court.

The act of 1851 finally disposed of the theory of no man's land, which has been advanced for purposes of confusion, and not in a spirit of seeking a solution. The theory of inherent sovereignty interests me. This is a pure court doctrine. Where in the Constitution is any mention made of State sovereignty? What article grants it to the States? In order to make any claim, the proponents of the bill rely upon this court doctrine, because it seems to be the only theory upon which any claim might be founded, if the decision of the courts suits them, they quote them; but when they are against their theories, they are the opinions of New Dealers and anything else. The Constitution provides, that powers not granted are reserved to the States. Does the Constitution state, in terms, that new States shall be sovereign States? What were their sovereign rights? They came into the Union on an equal footing with original States, but not original sovereign States. I find no constitutional basis for the inherent sovereignty theory.

I want to show you the maps which cover the situation at Long Beach.

There is definitely a lack of good faith in this whole case. Counsel for the Government failed to state the basis of ownership in the United States. They failed to ask for an adjudication to cover the points in controversy. California failed to tell the truth regarding their own legislation and thereby misled the attorneys general and Congress. Long Beach has also, in my opinion, failed to reveal the facts.

Since 1920 there have been no objections by the States to the operation of the leasing of the public domain under the Leasing Act. Why the pandemonium now?

I have been handed a letter written by E. W. Sawyer of Los Angeles, Calif., under date of March 5, 1948, a part of which states as follows:

"I notice city attorney, Irving Smith, of Long Beach testified that Long Beach has received $31,509,500 net from oil and gas produced from its municipal beaches.

"Arthur W. Nordstrom, assistant city attorney, of Los Angeles, testified that Los Angeles has received more than $2,000,000 from offshore wells.

"This is a total of $33,509,500, 27½ percent is $9,215,112, the amount which our State Junior College has lost; 52½ percent is $17,592,487, the amount which the reclamation in this State has lost by this set-up. That amount of cash would have built several dams for Santa Barbara and other areas that are now dying for lack of water.

"Los Angeles has about 40 percent of the State population, and if the $33,000,000 was divided in accord with the law, then Los Angeles would have benefited to the extent of $13,403,800, instead of the $2,000,000 which they have received."

I think it highly significant to consider how much in the way of harbor improvements in the city of Long Beach has been paid for out of United States Government oil, and how much has been lost to education; and, how much more Los Angeles would have received under the provisions of the Leasing Act.

It has not been my intention to make this statement upon any other basis than that of setting out the rights of the Government to minerals in the public domain, but inasmuch as my client, Robert E. Lee Jordan, has been called a speculator-promoter by the city attorney of Long Beach, I feel the committee should have the facts.

Mr. Jordan filed his application in the submerged land in the open or marginal sea, in front of the city of Long Beach, in April 1937. He filed his first application in that section and before anyone else thought there was any geological formation containing oil at that point. He was given a serial number of the Department of the Interior, and his filing does not overlap any other filing because he was the first. His application was canceled by Secretary Krug so Long Beach and its development company could continue to take Government oil.

It is revealing to consult the leases made by the city, with respect to drilling for oil. They contain the following provision:

"Warranty—Section 40.—It is agreed that neither said city nor said Board makes any covenant or warranty, express or implied, as to the title of said city, or the right of either said city or said Board to possession of said drill sites, or any portion thereof, or as to the condition thereof, or as to any easements, licenses, or privileges whatsoever pertaining thereto, and the permits and privileges of use and occupancy of said drill sites hereby created in favor of said contractor are so created by said Board without covenant of title, or right of possession, or for quiet enjoyment."

The claim to title urged so strongly before this committee fails to disclose the basis for its support. The leases establish the lack of any claim, and constitutes another proof of lack of title, of lack of justice of the claim, and the utter lack of good faith on the part of California and its subdivisions.

It is also to be noted that the Government sold them a $5,000,000 harbor installation for $1,000,000. It would appear that this continued bounty of oil and dollars should be ended, and the Leasing Act be enforced.

I certainly recommend for your serious consideration the preparation of a substitute bill, in line with the previous action of Congress in the Santa Barbara matter. It will, I feel sure, resolve all the difficulties which have been aired before the committee, and conform with the established principles of the law as expounded in the California case by the Supreme Court.

We believe the Government should control its own property. If Congress feels, after all the facts have been considered, that additional legislation is necessary, let Congress lease to the States the things they may feel they should have the use and enjoyment of; but, always maintain and reserve the mineral rights in all land owned by the Government and continue this governmental policy of reservation of minerals and other national resources, which has proved valuable and fair for our people and has stimulated individual enterprise and national preeminence.

It is also to be noted that the Government sold them a $5,000,000 harbor installation for $1,000,000. It would appear that this continued bounty of oil and dollars should be ended, and the Leasing Act be enforced.

Bill 1988, reduced to its last analysis is merely an assertion on the part of the proponents of the bill, to select the beneficiary who, or which, is to receive the natural resources of oil and gas in the public domain.

The bill, as pointed out yesterday, does not alter the decision of the Supreme Court as to the paramount rights of the United States Government in the marginal belt, and the bill does not reverse the decision of the Supreme Court. Nothing by way of overriding or setting aside the decision of the Supreme Court can be accomplished by the passage of bill 1988.

The Leasing Act was passed by Congress to cover the development of minerals in the public domain. I think a proper question would be whether or not the bill could legally deprive applicants of their rights to leases, by the passage of a subsequent act. We have no ex-post-facto laws and I think the rights of the applicants would ante-date the passage of any law with respect to the public domain. The courts would have to recognize all rights which accrued under the law, prior to the passage of a subsequent act; and, I think that Congress should be discouraged in pressing for an act which would, I believe, be unconstitutional on the foregoing grounds, if no other.

I earnestly recommend for your serious consideration the preparation of a substitute bill, in line with the previous action of Congress in the Santa Barbara matter. It will, I feel sure, resolve all the difficulties which have been aired before the committee, and conform with the established principles of the law as expounded in the California case by the Supreme Court.

We believe the Government should control its own property. If Congress feels, after all the facts have been considered, that additional legislation is necessary, let Congress give to the States the things which the States may feel they should have the use and enjoyment of, but always maintain and reserve the mineral rights in all lands owned by the Government and continue this Government policy of reservation of minerals and other national resources, which have proved valuable and essential for our people and has stimulated individual enterprise and national preeminence.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I have here an article which appeared in the Utah Labor News, which is a newspaper published at Salt Lake City. The article is dated February 27, 1948, and is entitled "Two 'Tidewater Oil' Bills Placed Before Congress; Said To Be 'Heads I Win, Tails You Lose' for Oilmen. Billions Are at Stake of People's Property in Coastal States; Burton K. Wheeler Demands Interior Department Obey Law and Supreme Court Decision."

I ask unanimous consent that the entire article be printed at this point in my remarks. I particularly bring it to the attention of the senior Senator from Utah. I will say to the distinguished Senator that it was called to my attention by Mr. M. I. Thompson, editor and publisher of the Utah Labor News.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TWO "TIDEWATER OIL" BILLS PLACED BEFORE CONGRESS; SAID TO BE "HEADS I WIN, TAILS YOU LOSE" FOR OILMEN—BILLIONS ARE AT STAKE OF PEOPLE'S PROPERTY IN COASTAL STATES; BURTON K. WHEELER DEMANDS INTERIOR DEPARTMENT OBEY LAW AND SUPREME COURT DECISION

Secretary of the Interior Julius A. Krug last week sent to Congress a bill which, he said, is the right solution of the long dispute over the fabulously valuable oil lands, under the water off the coasts of California, Texas, and other coastal States, reported Labor, a national weekly paper published in Washington, D. C., by 15 standard labor unions.

Most Members of Congress have not yet had a chance to study the bill, but one Senator, who is familiar with the history of the dispute, said the measure might well have been written by the big oil companies which now have control of the underwater petroleum lands.

Billions of dollars are at stake in this fight over a natural resource which should be used for the benefit of all the people.

The Krug proposals can be better understood after a brief look at the problem the bill proposes to solve. Some light is furnished by a lawsuit which Burton K. Wheeler, former Democrat Senator from Montana, filed this week in the Federal district court at Washington.

REPRESENTS "PROSPECTOR"

Wheeler asked the court to compel the Interior Department to carry out the provisions of the Federal Leasing Act and a Supreme Court decision, by granting to his client, Deryl L. Mayhew, a "permit" to prospect for oil on 1,600 acres of the California underwater land.

Back of Wheeler's lawsuit is this story:

About 15 years ago, Mayhew asked the Interior Department for this permit. He was turned down by Harold L. Ickes, then Secretary of the Interior, although Ickes had authority to grant the permit under the Federal Leasing Act.

In August 1935, Congress passed a Leasing Act amendment which directed the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits to Mayhew and other prospectors who had filed applications. Mayhew then appealed again to Ickes.

IGNORED ORDER BY CONGRESS

Despite the direction from Congress, neither Ickes nor his successor Krug, took any action on Mayhew's plea for the next 10 years.

Meanwhile, big oil companies played a clever and profitable trick. From the California shore, they drilled out under the ocean, and extracted oil from the lands for which the prospectors sought the permits. The companies are still doing that.

They pay comparatively small royalties to the State of California, and fear they would not be treated so generously by Uncle Sam. To make sure the Federal Government could not interfere, they slipped through Congress, about a year ago, a bill surrendering all such lands to the States, which means to the oil companies.

VETOED BY TRUMAN

President Truman vetoed the bill, and the Supreme Court, in October 1948, ruled that these lands belong to Uncle Sam.

The Interior Department and Justice Department are supposed to work for Uncle Sam, and might be expected to welcome the decision that the Federal Government owns these oil lands.

On the contrary, they started "stalling" and quibbling about the meaning of the decision. Meanwhile, oil company lobbyists again introduced their bill, asking Congress to overrule the Supreme Court and declare that the underwater lands belong to the States.

HAVE POLITICAL POWER

The Interior Department got from the Justice Department a legal opinion that the lands claimed by the prospectors are not the kind the Supreme Court meant. On that ground, Krug again turned down Mayhew's application.

The Justice Department opinion was signed by Attorney General Tom Clark, who comes from Texas, where vast off-shore oil lands have recently been discovered.

The big oil companies are politically powerful in both Texas and California.

On February 23, a Senate committee began hearings on the bill to leave the underwater lands in the hands of the States and oil companies.

The latter, however, may not need this bill if Congress passes the legislation proposed by Krug.

WOULD SLAM DOOR

Men who have studied it say it would whitewash all the past sins of the oil companies, by granting them legal immunity for their trespasses. If the bill passes, neither Uncle Sam nor the States could take any action against the oil companies for anything they have done in the past.

The oil companies would get new Federal leases in exchange for their old State leases. If Uncle Sam refused to grant a lease, he would have to buy off the oil company by paying it money out of the public treasury.

Summing it all up, observers say the oil companies have a "heads I win, tails you lose" proposition in the two bills.

One would put the lands back under State governments, which shrewd oil men feel they can handle even better than they have the Interior and Justice Departments.

The other would put the lands under Uncle Sam, but force him to give the oil companies substantially what they want.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I do not want unnecessarily to encumber the RECORD, but I have here the platform of the Republican Party to which I again refer. The State of Louisiana has legislation which claims all the oil-bearing lands under the ocean for a thousand miles. It is claimed that they belong to the State of Louisiana. The oil companies contribute 12½ percent, and the money goes to the school fund of Louisiana.

The States of Texas has leased all the land out to 54 miles, and the oil companies are pumping out there at this time.

The Humble Oil Co., for purposes incidental to lobbying, to be fair about it, threw into the jackpot $1,200,000. Some of the other oil companies have contributed. I gave their names when I read from the evidence of the Republican national committeeman from West Virginia.

So I can understand why my friend, the distinguished Senator from Missouri, appeared before the Republican platform committee and protested against the inclusion of this paragraph in the Republican platform. The only thing I am sorry for is that he did not get more help at the convention so as to be able to keep it out. The paragraph was placed in the platform at page 9, and it reads as follows:

> We favor restoration to the States of their historic rights to the tide and submerged lands, tributary waters, lakes, and streams.

Mr. President, as a matter of fact, they had no historic rights. I made it quite plain from the decision I read that at the time Texas was admitted into the Union, in 1845, it did not have a 3-mile limit. That came in a great deal later.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I heard the Senator use the name of a very distinguished West Virginian who has, for many years, been the Republican national committeeman for West Virginia. I could not hear what the Senator said, but I assume and hope that there was nothing disparaging in his remarks. Although Mr. Hallanan and I have vigorously fought each other in every political campaign for 30 years, I attest the fact that he has been a fair fighter and also one of the most courageous, uncompromising and effectual champions the Republican Party in West Virgina has had within the memory of living men.

Mr. LANGER. I say to my distinguished friend that all I did was to quote from his testimony, word for word, the way he gave it himself before a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I am sure that Mr. Hallanan would not object to any testimony he ever gave being read here or in any other place.

Mr. LANGER. Nothing I said was in the least derogatory.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. As I understand the situation, the Senator quoted from the Republican and Democratic platforms.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Republican platform plainly advocated the return of the tidelands to the States, did it not?

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Democratic platform advocated leaving the tidelands where they are, under the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. What tideland State, by its vote, sustained the Republican platform?

Mr. LANGER. I do not think there was any.

In one of the articles which I have here there is a threat against President Truman. When the President vetoed the bill I complimented him and said he did a remarkably fine job for the common people of the United States of America. Ten days before the election I again wrote him. I have a copy of that letter, together with his reply. I again complimented him on the fine job he had done before, and asked him to direct the Attorney General to sue the States of Texas and Louisiana in the way in which he had previously sued the State of California. The President said he would do it. After the election was over the Attorney General filed suit against Texas, and, in my judgment, he will win the suit. The facts are not all presented. Permission has been given by the Supreme Court to bring an action. The pleadings are drawn up very much along the same line as the pleadings in the California case.

Mr. President, I think one of the finest things ever done by any President in behalf of the common people of America was accomplished by Harry Truman when he vetoed the bill to which I have referred, when it was passed by the Eightieth Congress, and, later, when he directed the Attorney General to bring suit against Texas. Of course he did a very fine job when he originally caused the State of California to be sued. As a matter of fact, he directed that suit be brought when some of his very best friends were interested to the extent of millions of dollars if the decision went otherwise in the California case. It was a great act on the part of the President.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does not the distinguished Senator from North Dakota think that President Truman also rendered a great service when he vetoed the Taft-Hartley labor bill?

Mr. LANGER. I might add that I certainly agreed with him. I voted against the Taft-Hartley bill, and I voted to sustain the President's veto. I might say also that, with some of my Democratic friends of the Senate, I went to Madison Square Garden and made a speech upholding the President 2 or 3 days after he vetoed the bill. I think the Senator from West Virginia knows my attitude pretty well on that law.

Mr. Neely. I do. And the Senator's attitude on that measure is just another testimonial to the fact that he was, as usual, on the right side.

Mr. LANGER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NEELY. Let me make the prediction that, in all probability, his attitude, as he has expressed it, will save him a great deal of trouble in his next campaign in North Dakota, if his constituents share the views of the people of West Virginia on that subject.

Mr. LANGER. I would have very much less trouble if the Senator from West Virginia would come to North Dakota and make a few speeches there, because he ranks very high in North Dakota.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the Senator from North Dakota. I have my hands full in West Virginia, but I certainly have nothing but the best of wishes for the able Senator, or for any other Member of this body who has followed in his footsteps which have invariably led to progressive goals.

Mr. LANGER. I thank the Senator very much. Did the Senator from Louisiana have some questions he wished to ask?

Mr. LONG. Yes, Mr. President. The Senator has referred to $26,000,000,000 worth of oil off the coasts of Texas and Louisiana. I should like to ask the Senator if he has not overlooked the expense of going out and drilling to get that oil. As I understand, to go 50 miles out into the ocean and try to drill for oil is very expensive, and I am told that the chances are only about 1 in 16 of getting any oil. The best the State can hope to get out of the oil is one barrel in eight, it is said. So would it not be fair to divide the twenty-six billion by eight, to determine what the Federal Government would get if it were successful? Dividing $26,000,000,000 by eight would leave about $3,000,000,000.

Mr. LANGER. In the Hallanan statement, which I read, it was specifically stated that the State gets 12½ percent royalty. So it costs the State nothing. They get their royalty. So one-eighth of $26,500,000,000 would be one-eighth clear, without any expense to the State, whether it be Texas or Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. One-eighth of $26,000,000,000 would be something over $3,000,000,000. In other words, all the Federal Government could hope to realize clear would be around $3,000,000,000.

Mr. LANGER. That is what I said.

Mr. LONG. Which means that the Federal Government would not get $26,000,000,000 out of it. They would be getting only about $3,000,000,000 for all the oil produced.

Mr. LANGER. They would get 12½ percent clear. The distinguished Senator must remember that this is only one field.

Mr. LONG. That is, one State, the Senator means.

Mr. LANGER. One field.

Mr. LONG. One State.

Mr. LANGER. No, one field. And the geologists say they have not scratched the surface, that in their judgment they are going to find oil fields out in the Atlantic Ocean, as well as in the Pacific. They believe there is going to be billions of dollars worth of oil found off the coast of Alaska.

Mr. LONG. It is my understanding that off the shores of Texas or off the shores of Texas and Louisiana, going out to sea, there is estimated to be about $26,000,000,000 worth of oil, and it is the entirety of oil off the shores of those States, rather than one field. I never heard of one field that had $26,000,000,000 worth of oil in it.

Mr. LANGER. It is the richest oil field ever discovered in the history of the world.

Mr. LONG. As a matter of fact, the field the Senator is talking about has not been discovered, has it?

Mr. LANGER. I repeat, it is the richest oil field ever discovered in the history of the world, richer than the oil fields discovered in the interior of Texas, richer even than the oil fields in Iraq or Iran.

Mr. LONG. Is it not true that the oil field to which the Senator refers is an imaginary field, which has not yet been drilled? Is not that correct?

Mr. LANGER. I am referring to oil fields where the operators are now taking out oil. Mr. Hallanan said they were getting a million dollars a month in Texas right now from submerged tidal oil lands. Whether it be Alabama, Delaware, West Virginia, or Utah, I cannot see why under the law and the Supreme Court decision they should not be entitled to their share of the oil, whatever it may be.

I had hoped the distinguished Senator from Utah would take the amendment to conference, but he tells me that there may not be a conference, and that therefore he could not take it to conference. I wonder if he could accept it if there is to be a conference.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No, there is no way, and if the Senator presses me hard, I shall have to speak against his amendment, and urge the Senate to vote it down.

Mr. LANGER. Will the Senator suggest how it could be amended to accomplish the purpose? As I understand, the Senator from Utah objects to the provision in the amendment which, in lines 5 and 6, on page 1, says "any person." Would he be willing to take the amendment provided it said "officials of any school district"?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No, Mr. President, we have provided in the bill the proper appeal to be made to the proper authorities. Any amendment such as the amendment the Senator from North Dakota has offered is an amendment which results in an open invitation for some disgruntled person to make an appeal on practically any subject under the sun, which, of course, would make it possible to throw into litigation—not strictly litigation, but the equivalent of litigation—all the questions which we are trying to avoid. We want State supremacy and State control and we want no hindrance at all from anyone in regard to the way in which the bill is to be administered in the various States. It is because of that fact that it would be impossible to accept the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota. In fact, the amendment is so strong that it would probably interfere with the proper administration of the bill.

What the Senator has been saying about the tidelands oil—oil which belongs to the United States or to the various States, whichever way the case is ultimately determined—the Senator from Utah is in no sense adverse to the royalties from those oil fields being turned over to the schools of our country. But that, of course, is not provided in the bill.

I imagine the Senator from North Dakota is assuming that if, for instance, some person could make complaint about the way in which the bill was administered, he could continuously call attention to the fact that the royalties were not going to the proper place. If that were the only thing that might be done, of course, it would be very limited. But that is not what the amendment would do. The amendment would be an open invitation to what is ordinarily called a trouble maker in the administration of any law.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to ask the Senator a question: Assume there are 500 Mexican children in California who are ignored by the State and not permitted to come into the schools. Will the Senator say what, if anything, could be done about that without the amendment?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Very much could be done about it. For instance, if the State of California should not spend $55 per pupil upon a certain group, whether it be Mexican, whether it be Japanese, whether it be of Americans coming from Oklahoma—Okies, or Arkies, as the Californians called them a while back—then, of course, California would not be entitled to her share of the appropriation from the Government.

Mr. LANGER. Who could bring that to the attention of the Commissioner?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It would be brought to the attention of the Commissioner because it would be shown by the audit which is to be made every year.

Mr. LANGER. The audit made by the Federal Government?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I suppose the audit really and truly would be made by the State government, but it would be reviewed, of course, by the United States Commissioner of Education.

Mr. LANGER. Lines 1 and 2 of my amendment provide that the United States Commissioner of Education shall cause an audit to be made.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Senator will find that audit provisions are contained in the bill and are not inconsistent with the suggestion the Senator has made.

Mr. President, are we ready to vote on the amendment, or does the Senator from North Dakota wish to press his amendment?

Mr. LANGER. I should like to have a vote on my amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly in opposition to the pending bill. The pending measure, if enacted, will start a new subsidy to the States. It begins with an annual appropriation of Federal funds of $300,000,000 to public education, but it opens up a Pandora's box of Federal spending, and no one can foresee the end. It will certainly increase year by year, and I predict it will be greater, in time, than the present grand total of all Federal subsidies to the States.

There has never before in our history been a more unpropitious time for the Federal Government to enter a long-range proposition such as is proposed in the pending legislation. Today we are confronted with the certainty of a deficit in the fiscal years 1949, 1950, and 1951. The aggregate of these deficits may reach a total of at least $10,000,000,000. This will make a crushing increase in taxes inevitable, which may accelerate a recession into a real depression, as it now appears that these new taxation burdens will be placed upon a declining business prosperity. Taxes are burdensome at any time, but, when additional taxes are placed on the business of the country at a time when profits are being reduced, such action may be disastrous.

This is a new program, Mr. President, which we are undertaking at a time when no emergency exists with respect to it, and we are beginning something that will be permanent. I make the prediction that if we start the subsidy to the public schools it will be continued throughout the years and increased from time to time.

Let us remember also that we are making a deficit appropriation. We do not have the money to pay it. The proposed appropriation will increase the expected deficit for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1949, by 10 percent, by $300,000,000. The distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the chairman of the Finance Committee, and other members of the Finance Committee and members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House about this time next year will be struggling to find the money by imposition of additional taxes to take care of this appropriation, because I predict, and confidently predict, that the deficit for the year beginning July 1, 1949, which is right upon us, will not be less than three and one-half billion dollars. The deficit for the year beginning July 1, 1950, a year from now, will reach about $7,000,000,000. I predict that the deficit for the present year will be about $800,000,000.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In connection with the difficulty of the Federal Government in financing enterprises such as defense, which only the Federal Government can handle, and its accumulated debt of approximately $252,000,000,000, does the Senator from Virginia know of any State which is now facing such a financial handicap?

Mr. BYRD. To the contrary, Mr. President, most of the States have surpluses in their treasuries. Most of the States have reduced their indebtedness in the past few years. But the Federal Government has consistently increased its indebtedness.

Mr. President, tomorrow I am going to take the liberty of addressing the Senate at some length with respect to the fiscal condition of the country. I submit that we are in a perilous condition, because we are faced with declining business conditions of the country. I do not think anyone will question that. We are now collecting tax money on the highest level of prosperity this Nation has ever known. I do not think any sensible person can possibly think that this high level of prosperity and employment can continue indefinitely. With some ups and downs when we place taxes on a business whose profits are increasing, it is not so bad, but when we put huge taxes, as we will be forced to do a year from now, on a declining business economy we may easily accelerate, as I have said, a depression into a real disaster, because the business people are not going to be able to stand increased taxation when their profits decline.

Let us never forget, Mr. President, that the strength of America lies in a strong and virile system of free enterprise, which is not possible if taxes are so burdensome as to destroy initiative and the prospect of profits to those from whose business operations the Government obtains its funds to pay its costs.

This is certainly, as I have said, not the time to expend Federal funds in a new field, but we should conserve all our resources to meet the financial strain of the days to come. Particularly is this true at a time when we are assuming new and costly foreign obligations. We are already spending $7,000,000,000 abroad, and we will shortly be asked to arm 11 nations at a cost which no person can predict. It is estimated that the first year that cost will be $1,000,000,000 or $1,200,000,000, but that is just like a fly speck on the wall to what it will be in the future years to come, because these nations have about the same population that we have here, about 140,000,000 people. They are in a much more precarious geographical situation than we are. And to say that $1,000,000,000, plus $4,500,000,000 that these particular nations are now spending, will fortify them in such a way as to make them militarily secure seems to me little short of an absurdity.

I merely call that to the attention of the Senate because the new obligations are coming upon us. There are many Members of the House and of the Senate who believe it is necessary for the military security of this country to arm these foreign nations. That may be so; and it may not be so. Nevertheless, if it is so, then we certainly ought not to enter into a new spending field which will increase year by year in the years to come.

What I want to emphasize especially is that there is no way, regardless of what the pending bill provides, to guarantee that the Congress of the United States in future years will not prescribe the conditions and terms under which this fund can be expended. I want to warn my colleagues from the South especially that if they vote for this legislation no assurance or guaranty can be given to the effect that a future Congress will not attempt to use the instrument of this Federal appropriation as a means to control the operation of the schools in such specific ways as a majority of the Members of the Congress may desire. This control can be exercised by the simple expedient of an amendment to the annual appropriation bill, restricting the method in which the funds herein appropriated can be expended.

It has been said repeatedly on the floor of the Senate that the bill guarantees to the States that there will be no Federal control. As a matter of fact the bill itself sets up a Federal control, because it provides that no State can receive funds from the Federal Treasury unless they are already spending, I think, $55 per pupil. That is a standard. That is a direction from the Federal Government. That sum can be increased year by year. It can be made $100 per pupil consistent with the policy outlined in this very bill. The appropriation can be made upon the basis of what the school teachers are being paid. There are many ways by which the Federal Government can dictate to the States, if the States once accept this subsidy.

Some Members of the Senate who are present will recall that when a similar bill was before us for debate a year ago the Senator from Virginia requested the Presiding Officer to rule on the question whether or not such an amendment could be offered to future appropriation bills, regardless of any previous legislation to the contrary. This ruling was made by the then Presiding Officer, the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], after consultation with the Parliamentarian of the Senate, and is found on page 3931 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 1, 1948. It reads as follows:

> In the face of a point of order, Congress can only appropriate in an appropriation bill for purposes already authorized by law. The Congress can appropriate for all purposes authorized by law or appropriate for none of the purposes authorized by law. Within those limits, Congress can limit an appropriation. Congress can say that no part of an appropriation shall be expended for a part of the purposes which the law authorized. But a limitation must be absolutely negative. It must be in the nature simply of a veto. It cannot direct an executive officer in the discharge of his duties under existing law. Whenever it does it ceases to be a limitation and becomes legislation in violation of the rule.

That is the rule of the Senate. It will, therefore, be possible to amend any appropriation bill in the future to the effect that no part of the appropriation shall be used in States, for example, which practice segregation of the races in the schools. We could even go so far as to say that no part of the appropriation shall be used in States which use certain textbooks. The appropriation can be limited in any other way, in the discretion of Congress.

Again, Congress can amend this authorization act in any way it pleases in the future. So both by direct action and by the negative action of saying in the appropriation bills what this particular money can be spent for, Congress can exert any power it pleases over future appropriations made for this purpose.

The guarantee written into the bill, which is claimed by the proponents to be a permanent protection against Federal control of the schools, is not worth the paper on which it is written. A year ago, in the debate on this legislation, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] admitted this. He said:

> Of course, some future Congress may try to exercise control. Future Congresses can do anything they want to do. They can refuse to stand on the ground on which we now propose to stand.

I point out that the report submitted on October 14, 1943, by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the late Senator Walsh of Massachusetts, former Senator Ball of Minnesota, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], in opposition to Federal aid to education, in connection with a similar bill, said this:

It is impossible to give Federal money without controlling to some extent the expenditure of that money and the administration of the schools which spend it. If the amount is increased it is inevitable that Congress and the Federal authorities will insist upon the natural right to state the conditions of administration on which Federal funds are provided. Of course, the report continues, the same thing is true of all Federal-aid programs, but the effect is much worse in the case of education. It is unnecessary to expand on the tremendous dangers of centralized control of education, because the authors of the bill agreed to those dangers when they wrote section 1. Centralized control of education gives a power to the Central Government far beyond that of any other control, as Hitler has illustrated in Germany. It places the whole character and knowledge of the people in the hands of a Federal bureau. That bureau is more than likely to be guided by some small group of men who believe in this method of education or that method of education. It transfers the control from the people of each district to a man or men wholly beyond the control of public opinion. The people don't want it. There is no matter upon which they are more insistent than local control of education. There has been difficulty in centralizing schools even on a township basis, because the people of each district want to run their own schools.

This report was signed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and was written by him. This is what the Senator from Ohio said when the other bill was before the Senate several years ago. It is just as true today as it was then.

There is not a State in the Union which is unable to educate its own children if it is willing to assess taxes to do so. There is not a State in the Union which is unable to pay the taxes which the governing bodies of those States might assess in order to educate their own children. If the revenues of the State are not sufficient for all purposes, it should economize in other ways, as education is the primary function of any State. Under our system of a confederation of States, the greatest responsibility which rests upon the State is to educate its own children and control the method of their education.

Great increases have been made in appropriations for education. One would think, from listening to some of the statements which have been made, that nothing has been done in that direction. Between 1936 and 1947 State and local support for schools has increased from $1,656,000,000 to $3,124,000,000. The amount has doubled. This does not include increases in the year 1948 in a great number of States, counties, and cities. So far as I can observe, the greatest increase in appropriations for schools in any year was in 1948, and the figures which I have cited do not include that year.

The pending bill would give Federal aid to schools in States which do not need it. Only yesterday the Senate defeated the Tydings amendment by a large majority, thus giving Federal aid to States which do not need it. That answers the statement made by the proponents of this legislation that all they are doing is trying to prevent illiteracy. If a State is able to educate its children to prevent illiteracy, there is no justification whatever for the Federal Government giving to that State money out of the Federal Treasury and then collecting it back from the States in the form of taxation.

We hear it said from time to time that we must give grants to the States. Many people have been educated to believe that a grant from Washington is a gift. The distinguished Presiding Officer [Mr. HOEY], who has been a great Governor of a great State, knows that every dollar that comes to Washington must be collected from the people of the States in the form of taxation. There is no validity in the contention that States can obtain a grant from the Federal Government and not pay it back.

What happens? We send our money to Washington. We create a vast bureaucracy which is increasing its power day by day over the daily actions of the people. That bureaucracy takes its toll, which is 10 or 20 percent. It is difficult to estimate the cost of bureaus in handling funds which come from the States. Then the money is sent back to us in the States and we are told how to spend the money.

There is not a single appropriation that is made by the Federal Government for the States with respect to which standards under which the money may be spent are not established. We talk about other appropriations for education. They are minor compared to this program. I think there is an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the land-grant colleges, and about $26,000,000 a year for vocational training. But here we are giving the States $300,000,000. It is certainly reasonable to think that in years to come the Federal Congress, which gives this money to the States, will sooner or later say how the money is to be spent.

The distinguished occupant of the chair and the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], who was then governor, know that even in connection with the question of roads, the Federal Government establishes certain standards. At one time the standards were so restricted and so difficult to meet that when I became Governor of Virginia in 1926 I had difficulty in obtaining Federal funds from Washington, to which we were entitled, because of the very high standard which the Federal Department of Roads maintained at that time. I am not challenging it. I think perhaps that department has been as well managed as any other. But the fact remains that during that particular period, before we were entering into the construction of costly roads, there was a time when it was difficult for the States to match by 50 percent the Federal contribution by reason of the high standard established by the Federal Government.

So when we say that this is a gift, we are mistaken. It is not a gift, because we pay it back. It is said that there are to be no restrictions, and that no strings are to be attached to the grants. I have heard that expression a hundred times on the floor of the Senate. That is not correct. As I have pointed out, the bill itself contains restrictions, because a State cannot receive aid except under certain conditions.

Mr. President, as I have said, this bill, if passed, will take the Federal Government into a new venture in the field of appropriations. No one can foretell the end of that venture, once it is started.

I wish to say that one of the most serious things we are doing in many instances in the field of appropriations is to make long-range, permanent appropriations which cannot be changed, no matter what the situation of the Government may be in the years to come.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to his colleague?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Of course, the Senator recalls the fight that Thomas Jefferson made in Virginia for public education, and the fact that, although he failed to get public schools established, he did bring about the establishment of the University of Virginia, which he called the capstone of the educational system which he wished to have inaugurated; and the founding of that university was one of the three things he wished to have noted on his tombstone as an achievement of which he was distinctly proud.

Does the Senator know of anything in the writings of Thomas Jefferson or in the writings of any of the founding fathers that would show that they even remotely looked upon public education as being a proper function of the Federal Government?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not have the quotations here, but I know that Thomas Jefferson said time and time again that public education was a function of the localities. He did not even regard it as a State function.

Let me continue for a moment to speak about the long-range appropriations the Federal Government is making. It seems to me that any appropriation that is made to the States, as State aid, and with the money thus provided being incorporated into the income of the States, should be regarded as a long-range appropriation, because it will never be changed. We will not give it to the States one year and take it away from them the next year, for to do so would be to disrupt the budgets of the States. To the contrary, the appropriations thus made would be increased.

For instance, we have begun a housing program, calling for an appropriation of $200,000,000 for this year. However, Mr. President, the ultimate cost of that program may be as much as $500,000,000 a year. That program may cost us as much as $20,000,000,000 over a period of 40 years. Yet when the Senators voted for that bill, it provided for a commitment of only $200,000,000 for 1 year.

Mr. President, a number of the Members of the Senate have been the Governors of their States. For instance, I might refer to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and to other Senators. They know that such permanent appropriations will be terribly burdensome when times of adversity come—and they will come. We will not stay on a high level of prosperity always, Mr. President, for history does not record that a nation has ever continued on a high level of prosperity for a continuous period. There are dips and there are valleys in the prosperity graph; and when such times come, these permanent appropriations cannot be changed. For instance, the interest on the public debt is a fixed charge. That interest is increasing all the time. Some slight payments on the public debt have been made from surpluses, but not from taxes or as a result of economies. We have a permanent long-range appropriation for the veterans which will amount to perhaps six billion or seven billion dollars, and that program is one we will have to maintain, because it is for the benefit of those who risked their lives and perhaps were maimed or injured in the service of their country.

Mr. President, some of our people talk about the prosperity we have now. There is a prosperity on the surface; but a 10 percent decline in the national prosperity of the United States would mean a $5,000,000,000 loss to the Federal Treasury. If we go back to where we were 18 months ago, we shall lose $5,000,000,000 of Federal Government tax income that we are receiving now, because the experts tell us that for every $4 of national income lost—and national income is the aggregate of the incomes of the 142,000,000 American people—the Federal Treasury loses $1 in tax revenues. So, Mr. President, instead of our being on a permanent long-range basis of prosperity, as many of our people think we are, we are actually living on a very shallow basis. We are living in a glass house, which may crack at any time because of a recession in business.

As I have said before, Mr. President, this is not the time to undertake a new burden like the one proposed by the pending measure. Our Federal debt is $252,000,000,000. The debts of the States are only $18,000,000,000. The Federal Government is faced with constantly increasing expenditures in the fields reserved entirely for Federal spending. The Federal Government has the sole responsibility for the defense of this country; and in that connection we shall spend, a year from now, $16,000,000,000. When I first came to the Senate, 16 years ago, the Federal Government was spending $500,000,000 for national defense, and the year before the war we were spending something more than $1,000,000,000 for national defense. Yet a year from now we shall be spending $16,000,000,000 for national defense, with no prospect whatever, so far as I can see, of a reduction in that expenditure for some time to come, except by way of economies, which I think can be effected, but not to the extent of making large reductions in expenditures. Of course the Federal Government assumes sole responsibility for the foreign aid which has increased so enormously.

The Federal Government is faced with constantly increasing expenditures, as I have said, in the fields reserved entirely for Federal spending. All the State budgets are in balance. I challenge any Senator to point to a single State which has a prospective deficit such as the Federal Government has. Today the budget of the Federal Government is out of balance. Nine hundred million dollars will be the deficit for this year at the lowest estimate. Yet there is not a single State of the Union that is facing the crisis of a deficit. To the contrary, most of the States have comfortable surpluses.

I shall not take the time of the Senate—although I did so a year ago—to read a statement of the surpluses which the States have, but there is not a single State which is without a sizable surplus. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] said the other day that Mississippi and Arkansas—I have not heard the Senators from those States say this—cannot educate their own children. I have heard some other Senators make that statement. It is obvious that the States should use their surpluses to educate their children before they call upon the Federal Government for assistance in that connection.

Mr. President, at a meeting in Chicago which I attended as a representative of the Senate Finance Committee, to meet a similar committee representing the Governors Conference which was presided over by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], then the Governor of his State, a resolution was unanimously adopted by the Governors present. They recognized the evils of these constantly increasing grants from the Federal Government to the States, and that Conference of Governors, representing all the governors of the United States, adopted the following resolution, last September:

> Our States and our citizens must cease relying upon the Federal Government to do those things which they may do for themselves as well as or better than the Federal Government.

That resolution was adopted by the Governors' Conference.

The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] was with me at that time. Former Senator Hawkes of New Jersey was also there, and Mr. Knutson, then chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, was there. That was the consensus of opinion of that meeting of the Governors—in other words, that there should not be any further expansion of Federal Government grants-in-aid to the States.

Mr. President, the Federal Government is already giving more than $2,000,000,000 to the States. In one form or another, the Federal Government is advancing to the States, now, approximately $2,225,000,000. I think the time has come for us to make a survey of the situation and see who is in a better financial condition to do these things—whether the Federal Government, which has to make such enormous expenditures in maintaining the armed services and maintaining our defense, and is contributing huge amounts to foreign aid, should finance the other programs now being discussed, or whether that should be done by the States and localities themselves. We could thereby greatly reduce our Federal bureaucracy.

Mr. President, as I have said, I have served as governor of my State and also as a Senator representing my State in the Senate of the United States. I do not think there is a State in the Union as inefficient and incompetent as is the United States Government, taking it as a whole. The Federal Government now has 1,192 bureaus which have been built up in the last two years, and it has 2,100,000 employees; and the number of Federal Government employees is increasing at the rate of 300 a day. No one can account for that; no one can say why 300 people a day are added to the Federal pay roll. Yet today—and the same situation has been true during the past 12 months—there is not a day, on the average, when 300 employees, in addition to those who may have been dismissed, have not been added to the Federal pay roll, at a cost of approximately $3,100 or $3,200 each. There is no prospect that I can see, Mr. President, of reducing that. We have tried it. The Congress fixed a ceiling. The distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and myself were patrons of a bill which passed, requiring a ceiling to be placed on the different departments. Apparently it does not work.

Mark this: We have more than twice as many Federal employees as we had at the time of the attack on Pearl Harbor. Why should we have twice as many Federal employees as we had in 1941?

I shall conclude by reading very briefly from a report made by my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. I am reading it, not to embarrass the Senator, who has since changed his mind, because I have the highest admiration for him. I am reading it because it states in language I have never seen equaled the opposition, the proper and just and right opposition to this legislation. The Senator from Ohio submitted minority views on a bill which was introduced some years ago, a bill which was practically the same as the one now pending. He submitted the minority views for himself, for Senator Walsh, for Senator Ball, and for the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], in connection with Senate bill 637, which was then pending. I merely want to read some extracts from the minority views, because what was said by the Senator from Ohio at that time is just as true now as it was when he said it, and I predict it will be just as true in years to come. He said:

> Taking both parts of this bill together, it is a proposal to establish a Federal subsidy for common-school and high-school education, a function of the State governments and local governments for the last 150 years. There can be no doubt that common-school and high-school education is the obligation of the States and their local subdivisions under our constitutional system and that it is not an obligation of the Federal Government. There is nothing whatever in the Constitution which delegates to the Federal Government power to deal with questions of education. All authority for a Federal subsidy of education must be based upon the spending power, which is sufficiently broad to give a legal basis for the current bill, as for other subsidies to local government.

However, Federal subsidies to the States for matters which are clearly not within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government are certainly only justified on the ground that the States are unable to finance adequately the activities which are constitutionally assigned to them. It is undoubtedly true that the taxing powers of the States are somewhat limited, and that under some conditions the Federal Government may be in a better position to raise money where it should be raised than the States themselves. It was on this ground that the Federal Government went so extensively into the financing of relief in the great emergency of 1932. Here was a tremendous new expenditure for which no provision was made in the State systems of finance, calling for a very large sum which the States were wholly unable to raise. But as the emergency declined, the Federal Government has gradually withdrawn its aid, and relief today is again administered by the States.

The same conditions do not at all apply to education.

Said the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]:

The States have always financed education. In nearly every State it has been given a prior consideration in dividing the funds which are available. One-third of all State and local taxes are spent for education. If the States and localities can't finance education, they can't finance any State or local activities.

I agree with the Senator from Ohio in that statement. I repeat it: If the States and localities cannot finance education, they cannot finance any State or local activities.

In many other States, school boards are independent of cities, towns, and counties, and answerable directly to the people. In Ohio and elsewhere the people of each community are authorized to vote additional tax levies on themselves for schools if they feel that more money is needed for good educational facilities. There is complete home rule in the field of education, and that is what the people want. A curious result of this bill would be to grant additional money to many public schools in such a State as Ohio, when often the people of the community have decided that the schools don't need any more money and have refused to vote extra levies for that purpose.

I shall not read it all. I shall not take the time of the Senate to do so, but it would be very enlightening to all Senators interested in the pending bill to read that report. It is a magnificent report in its denunciation and disapproval of what we are about to do. I recognize that my effort here this afternoon is only a forlorn hope. There is no chance of changing any votes. The bill is going to be passed by a large majority, and then, next year, a request for an increase may be passed by an even greater majority. I am only speaking today, Mr. President, in order to make my position clear and keep my record straight.

The adoption of the present bill would undoubtedly embark the Federal Government in a gradually increasing expenditure from which it would never be relieved. If we once pay from $200 to $300 of the salary of every school teacher in the country, how can we possibly ever withdraw that support? Even if the States become richer, they will never be willing to take over this burden. Having yielded once to a very strong pressure, there will be no way in which to prevent a further yielding.

"The desires of the educators are almost without limit. The whole question of Federal aid to education is discussed in the report of the National Resources Planning Board for 1943, on page 68. That report takes the position that the Nation is now spending less than 50 percent of the amount needed to provide a justifiable minimum educational program. Current expenditures and capital outlay for education in the United States are shown to be approximately $3,200,000,000."

The "justifiable minimum annual expenditures in the postwar period"—

Said the Senator from Ohio in the report—

are said to be $7,385,000,000.

Just one more quotation, Mr. President, and I am through.

The Senator from Ohio said:

There is an even more important question. Can Federal subsidies to the public-school system be maintained without ultimately bringing about a nationalization of our educational facilities and federalized bureaucratic control? This is an eventuality which the proponents of the present bill insist is not intended and which they maintain can be avoided. They contend that by the provisions of section 1 the danger is removed. We seriously question this conclusion. We believe that in the complexity of reports, of plans, of State legislation to conform to Federal policies, of counsel and advice and joint participation of the Federal Government and the States, and all of the other manifold details of the operation of the contemplated program of Federal subsidies, our public-school systems would be gradually—but no less inevitably, drawn more and more under the thumb of a Federal bureaucracy.

The Senator from Ohio, when he wrote that report, said words that will last through the ages. The Senate, I predict, will regret the time it passed the first appropriation, a subsidy for schools, when it is seen, as the years go on, that the Federal Government, through its bureaus, will send out its long arm, which it always has when it gives money to the States, and dictate the method and ways in which the States shall spend the money. The Senator from Ohio continued:

We have pointed out that the ultimate plans call for the Federal Government assuming perhaps half the cost of education.

That is the plan the Senator from Ohio says the National Education Association has.

Our experience with the social-security laws and many others lead to the definite conclusion that Federal subsidy in the end means Federal control. Those who put up the money and have the power to refuse it dictate the policies of the local officials. Federal bureaucrats travel the country, checking up on the expenditures and the policies of every school board and other local officials.

Now, just the concluding paragraph of the report by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and I close. He said:

We do not subscribe to the doctrine that because our public schools and our educational facilities are a vital element in our national welfare, they thereby become the proper concern and implied responsibility of the National Government.

Our schools are one of the few remaining bulwarks of local self-government and community enterprise. They should so remain. They have on the whole been well managed and generously supported. We have today too much centralization of control over the affairs of our citizens in a Federal bureaucracy. We should not add to it by this new excursion into the field of education.

I submit, Mr. President, that this is the most powerful argument that has been uttered by anyone in this debate in opposition to the very action we are about to take.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER].

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, with undivided attention, I have listened to the carefully prepared address of the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] in which, he has, with his usual vigor, voiced his opposition to Senate bill 246—the object of which is to provide the States $300,000,000 a year with which to increase and improve the educational service of their elementary and secondary schools.

The distinguished Senator referred to the fact that he was formerly the Governor of Virginia. He thus reminded me of another governor of that great State, namely, Gov. William Berkeley who, in the year 1671, made an official report of the conditions in Virginia to the British Commissioners of Colonies. That report is one of the unforgettable minor documents of American history. It contains a discussion of many matters, including religion, free schools, education, and printing. Governor Berkeley said, among other things:

Our ministers are well paid, and by my consent should be better if they would pray oftener and preach less.

That observation is not important in this debate. But hear what this eccentric governor said on the subject of free schools, learning, and printing:

I thank God there are no free schools, nor printing, and I hope we shall not have these hundred years; for learning has brought disobedience and heresy and sects into the world, and printing has divulged them, and libels against the best government. God keep from both.

That was a Virginia governor's evaluation of education, learning, and printing presses 278 years ago.

Upon the question whether the people of Virginia now share Governor Berkeley's opinion, I would not be a qualified witness, and consequently I refrain from speaking on this point. But, in my judgment, a vast majority of the people of the United States reject every word, syllable, and letter of the philosophy expressed by Berkeley, and wholeheartedly favor the Federal-aid-to-education proposal now before us.

The bill demonstrates a degree of Democratic and Republican, progressive and conservative cooperative statesmanship in this body that has seldom been equaled and probably never surpassed. The author of the measure is the eminent Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. But 14 others, representing almost every shade of political, economic and social opinion in the Senate, joined the Senator from Utah as sponsors of this great instrumentality of education benefits. The names of the cosponsors are, in their alphabetical order, as follows: Senators AIKEN, CHAVEZ, ELLENDER, HILL, IVES, LONG, MCGRATH, MORSE, MURRAY, NEELY, PEPPER, SMITH of New Jersey, TAFT, and TOBEY.

Those who do the Senate the injustice of charging that its Members are constantly at war among themselves over their conflicting interests and beliefs should not fail to realize that the pending measure is an imperishable testimonial to the fact that on the important question of education there are cooperation, peace and progress in this great legislative body.

In every State that accepts the benefits of the proposed law, every boy and girl between the ages of 5 and 17 years—regardless of race or color or creed—will have at least $55 a year beneficently expended for the purpose of providing him or her an elementary or a secondary education.

The bill, if enacted, will mean that in every illiterate community in the country ignorance will cease to be bliss, learning will advance, the general welfare will be promoted, health will be improved, happiness will be increased and the Nation as a whole will be greatly enriched and blessed.

The Senator from Virginia referred to the necessity of maintaining a thrifty free economy in order to preserve the strength of the Nation. In this opinion I fully concur. But there is something else that is also indispensable to our national strength in peace as well as in war—and that is education. The great statesman, Edmund Burke, said: "Education is the cheap defense of nations." This, I conceive to be another way of saying that education is worth more than it costs.

Aristotle, one of the wisest of all philosophers, said:

> Education is an ornament in prosperity and a refuge in adversity.
> The educated are as superior to the uneducated as the living are to the dead.

The outstanding educator, Horace Mann, declared:

> The free school is the greatest discovery ever made by man.
> Education is our only political safety. Outside of this ark all is deluge.

And is education necessary to national defense? A celebrated French statesman attributed Germany's victory in the Franco-Prussian War to the superiority of Germany's educational system over that of France.

During the Second World War more than 676,000 of our youth who were called to the colors proved to be educationally deficient for selective service.

In a universal struggle for existence, no illiterate nation would have a shadow of a chance to survive. The American people must lead the educational procession, or lose their leadership in world affairs.

The Senator from Virginia said, in effect, that there is no emergency to justify the Federal Government in spending $300,000,000 a year for educational purposes. My answer to this observation is that there are more than 2,000,000 children of school age in the United States today who are destitute of any sort of education. There are approximately 2,000,000 other children of school age whose scanty educational opportunities are as inadequate as the fantastic method of teaching mathematics which Gulliver, on his visit to Laputa, found in operation in that imaginary land. It was as follows:

The proposition under consideration and its demonstration were written on a wafer with ink which contained a cephalic tincture. The pupil was required to swallow the wafer upon a fasting stomach and, for 3 days following, eat nothing but bread and drink nothing but water. As the wafer digested, the tincture circulated to the brain, carrying both the proposition and the solution with it.

But, as Gulliver mournfully complains, this method proved to be unsatisfactory because the children would run away from school and, in violation of instructions, eat to the satisfaction of their hunger before the digestion of the wafer had been completed, and thus entirely defeat the educational undertaking.

Under the operation of the proposed law, the 2,000,000 children who are without any educational opportunities and the other 2,000,000, whose educational opportunities are inadequate, would all be rescued from the flood of ignorance in which they are now perishing and taken into the commodious education ark of safety spoken of by Professor Mann.

The passage of the bill would mark the most momentous, praiseworthy action ever taken by a legislative body in the Western Hemisphere in favor of free education. The event should be commemorated in every State in the Union with storied urns or animated busts, or other appropriate monuments of undying gratitude.

Let us, by a decisive vote, account not to Governor Berkeley and his heartless philosophy, but to Aristotle, Edmund Burke, Horace Mann and the wise counsel they bequeathed us. Let us, unhesitatingly improve the present golden opportunity to save millions of American boys and girls from ignorance, despair, and ruin, and thus demonstrate our adherence to the sublime principle embodied in the Master's admonition:

> Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER].

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the pending question is still the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator from North Dakota came by my desk, I should say possibly a half hour ago, and said he would be out of the Chamber for about an hour. I have an amendment I desire to present. I realize that the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota is pending at this time, and I would rather not talk on my amendment while his is pending. I am rather fearful that his amendment is going to be protected, and not voted on until his return, and I was contemplating, after other Senators speak, if they desire to speak, to move to lay aside temporarily the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota so that my amendment might be the order of business. I desire to give notice to that effect, so that the Senate may be so advised.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold his suggestion until those who desire to speak on the pending amendment may do so? We will see whether the Senator from North Dakota may not then be present on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. DONNELL. I shall be very happy to comply with the suggestion.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, since the report of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare bringing to the floor of the Senate the pending bill, my office has been in receipt of very heavy correspondence from my State, representing people in all walks of life, representing organizations of all kinds, supporting and urging the passage of the bill as reported to the Senate by the committee. The correspondence does not come from what might be called an educational lobby seeking money in the way of pay for teachers. It does not consist of petitions, but of personal letters, from bankers, from newspaper editors, from farmers, from merchants, from heads of civic clubs, practically without exception urging the passage of the bill in its original form.

Mr. President, we face a peculiar situation in the United States. We face an inequity of distribution of actual earnings. Many of the States—and my State is one of them, as are most of the Southern States—depend for income, largely upon the production of raw material and the major portion of such industries as are located within their borders is held by people outside the State, sometimes even people outside the United States. These States suffer from this inequitable distribution of income, and statistics show that the States which pay the lowest amount per pupil for the education of their children almost without exception pay most of the income of the State, percentagewise, for education. That is due to the fact that the major income in those States is by way of wages and salaries. On the other hand, other States pay much less than their per capita income for schools, yet are able to pay much more per pupil to educate their children.

I think the pending bill is aimed at a more equitable distribution of what I like to call fugitive income, and when I hear the representatives of some States speaking about the amount of Federal income tax paid from their States, I could go into the corporate index of my own State and show that a sizable proportion of the income tax paid there was earned from products originating in the State of West Virginia on which not one cent of the tax has ever come to help the school children of West Virginia.

I have sorted out the letters to which I have referred, and I intend to ask unanimous consent to have a few of them printed as a part of my remarks in the body of the RECORD. The first one, for instance, happens to come from a teachers' association, from the president of the West Virginia State Teachers' Association, endorsing the bill.

Another comes from a junior high school in my State, the principal of the high school endorsing the bill.

Another is from a taxpayer of the State at White Sulphur Springs.

Another is from the business manager of the Glenville Democrat, of Glenville, W. Va., endorsing the bill.

I have a letter from a mother in one of our communities endorsing the bill.

Another letter is from a rural section, from a farmer, urging the passage of the bill in order that his children may receive better schooling.

Another is from a businessman in the city of Fairmont, from which city my distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from West Virginia, comes, endorsing the bill.

Another is from a taxpayer and a worker in Weston, W. Va.

Another is from the assistant cashier of the Home National Bank of Sutton, W. Va.

One is from the principal of a grade school, who knows the problem of getting and paying teachers and keeping his school going.

One is from a stock raiser in my State.

Another is from the mayor of one of our municipalities.

Another is a letter from the Lions' Club of West Union, one of our communities.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these letters be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WEST VIRGINIA STATE
TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION,
Logan, W. Va., February 28, 1949.

Hon. HARLEY M. KILGORE,
United States Senate,
Capitol Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: The last world conflict probably proved beyond a doubt that the schools of our Nation were very short on personnel, facilities, and everything else needed to educate the majority of our citizens. We want to improve this condition, that should have never existed in a Nation as great as ours.

So at this time we are requesting your support and influence toward an early enactment of Senate bill 246, Federal aid to education.

I am quite sure the parents, teachers, and citizens in general will be very grateful for your consideration of this bill.

Very sincerely,

KNUTE W. BURROUGHS,
President.

BARNES JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL,
Fairmont, W. Va., April 20, 1949.

Hon. HARLEY M. KILGORE,
Senator from West Virginia,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KILGORE: You have been honored and respected by the people of this community for your stand on many issues which have been dear to the hearts of the common man. I honestly believe that you have touched a tender spot in their affections in your support of Federal aid to education. You will not soon be forgotten for your stand on this most important piece of legislation, now before the American people.

Sincerely yours,

F. WALTER COX,
Principal.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. VA.,
April 26, 1949.

Senator HARLEY M. KILGORE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington 25, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: As a supporter of you and the Democratic Party since I became of age, I am writing to you to urge your unlimited support of Senate bill S. 246, covering Federal aid to education.

As a teacher in the elementary schools of Greenbrier County for the past 14 years, I am well aware of the shortcomings of our present educational system which have been fostered by a shortage of funds. I am acquainted with teachers who are only high-school graduates, with those who are seeking any kind of means to escape the profession, with those who lurch through a school year with a total lack of pupil interest, and it's easy to understand when I find that my yearly salary of $1,900 must compete in the markets with the common laborer earning $2,400–$2,500 in this little community, this despite the fact that he has made no preparation for his tasks. I am denied the benefits of social security. My only light is the meager pension which I may gain after half a lifetime of bare existence.

Can a system like this promote the urge in teachers to impart the necessary instructions to the pupils who are the real sufferers. Again I urge your support of S. 246.

Sincerely yours,

CAMILLA SNEDEGAR.

THE GLENVILLE DEMOCRAT,
Glenville, W. Va., April 22, 1949.

The Honorable HARLEY M. KILGORE,
Member, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KILGORE: I note with pleasure your interest in and sentiment for passage of bill S. 246, Federal aid to education.

From a layman's viewpoint, it would seem that your view on the matter is exactly right; I congratulate you and hope that you will continue to do all within your power to see that this bill gets the approval of your fellow colleagues.

Our schools need Federal aid, and it seems that the measure proposed is perhaps the most equitable means of helping all parties concerned. Only through this means will we ever be able to put on the type of building and rebuilding program so urgently needed here in our own county of Gilmer.

Again, thanks for your interest in behalf of the schools, and best wishes for a long, enjoyable stay as one of our Senators in our Nation's Capital.

Very truly yours,

LINN B. HICKMAN,
Associate Editor and Business Manager.

PRINCETON, W. VA., April 26, 1949.

Mr. HARLEY M. KILGORE,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing on behalf of the Federal-aid-to-education bill which is to come before the Senate within the next few days. I want you to support the bill and do everything in your power to get it to pass. The schools in West Virginia, and teachers also, are in need of aid to meet the standards of living today. We are now living on a bare existence salary for 9 months. The other 3 we are not meeting expenses. The Senators from West Virginia supported the bill in the last Congress, and I hope they will do so again this time.

We teachers are counting on you to help us get a better standard of living.

Yours truly,

MRS. LENA PETTREY.

ROANOKE, W. VA., April 19, 1949.

DEAR SENATOR: I want to congratulate you on your interest in the Federal-aid-to-education bill. I, too, think it is a good bill and should be passed without doubt.

I have been a small local farmer for the past 40 years in West Virginia. I have seen much advancement in education, but not nearly enough. In many ways boys and girls of West Virginia have a hard time competing with boys and girls from other States which offer a higher standard of education.

With Federal aid all States will be equal in opportunity for an education, which will be a great thing for the United States. Residents of one State will not be looked down upon by another State, as they have formerly been.

I urge you to do all you can to speed up the passage of this bill.

Thank you.

Sincerely yours,

G. E. HAWKINS.

Hon. HARLEY M. KILGORE,
Senator from West Virginia,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As a parent of children in Barnes School, Fairmont, W. Va.; wife of a teacher at Fairmont Senior High School, and member of the Bellview Community Club (combined PTA and civic organization), I wish to thank you and Mr. NEELY for your good work in helping to get the bill for Federal aid to education out of committee and ready for presentation before the Senate.

I hope you can successfully use the influence of your office to bring the bill to a quick and favorable vote.

We people of this community realize that it is not only in our own community school that these funds are needed but all over the Nation. But in our own school (Barnes) the plaster is falling off the walls and ceilings endangering the lives of many children.

So, first of all, for safety measures, we hope Federal aid will be forthcoming since our local boards are unable to raise enough money to take care of all the needs.

Yours truly,

GLADYS M. WHITE
(Mrs. R. Ryland White).

Hon. HARLEY M. KILGORE,

DEAR MR. KILGORE: I wish to thank you for supporting the Federal-aid-to-education bill.

I am a farmer. I have 12 children, 8 of whom have already completed their education and 4 still in school. I would like for my children still in school to receive the special privilege and opportunities which myself and my older children were deprived of.

Please use your influence to bring this bill before the floor of the Senate.

Yours very truly,

ELDON BRIGHT.

Hon. HARLEY M. KILGORE,
Senate of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We here have received some indications that the Federal-aid-to-education bill may meet with some strong opposition when brought before the Senate for a vote.

While we fully realize your stand is favorable toward the bill it is somewhat of a worry to think that our children are to be left out of necessary building facilities and equipment because of a lack of money. We have moved to a state of mind in recent years that if the need is great enough there is always some way of securing funds to put a movement over the top. Certainly this is a case where the need is great.

We join with you in hoping that this bill will pass. If there is anything we can do to forward its passage call on us.

Sincerely,

M. B. JAMES.

Senator HARLEY M. KILGORE,
Senate of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: We are certainly pleased to note that you are favorably inclined toward the passage of the Federal education bill (S. 246). You realize along with us the urgent need for additional funds to operate our schools at top efficiency.

I only wish it was possible in some way for the teaching group to bring to the public the ill effects of our crowded classroom conditions, our out-of-date buildings, and our below normal certified teaching group. All these conditions will be somewhat alleviated by the additional funds made possible through Federal aid to education.

Accept our thanks for your work in getting this bill through. We do feel it will go through when brought to that stage in the legislation program.

Sincerely,

ERNIE W. HARRIS,
Principal.

DEAR SENATOR: As a citizen of West Virginia I wish to express my appreciation for your loyalty and interest in the education of the youth of our State and I urge you to use your influence to have bill (S. 246) put on the calendar and passed by the Senate as soon as possible.

I am interested in raising the standards of education in West Virginia so that our young people will have a better chance of competing with others.

Yours for better education,

Senator HARLEY M. KILGORE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to thank you for your interest in Federal aid to education, and especially for your interest in S. 246, and to urge you to support this bill when it comes up for debate and vote.

I believe nothing the Eighty-first Congress can do will be of greater moment than passage of the Federal-aid-to-education bill. I need not state the reasons to you because you are more familiar with them than I am. But I wanted to express to you my great interest in this legislation and ask your continued support of it.

Sincerely yours,

LIONS CLUB OF WEST UNION, W. VA.,
April 29, 1949.

Hon. HARLEY M. KILGORE,
United States Senator, Senate
Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: The regular meeting of the Lions Club of West Union, W. Va., was held at West Union April 26, 1949. At this meeting it was unanimously agreed to inform you of our support of the Federal-aid-to-education bill as it is now written.

Respectfully yours,

R. C. HUDKINS,
President.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, in voting on this bill I urge that none of us think of it as a charitable gesture to improvident States, but as a means of more equitably redistributing the money earned in those States but credited to the incomes of other and more fortunate States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER].

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I wish to address an inquiry to the minority leader, if I may do so without impropriety.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may do so.

Mr. DONNELL. Is it the opinion of the Senator from Nebraska that the Senator from North Dakota would have any objection to his amendment being voted upon now?

Mr. WHERRY. In response to the question asked by the Senator from Missouri I will say that I have just spoken with the Senator from North Dakota, who is detained from the Senate on official business. He said it would be perfectly agreeable to him if the Senate were to vote on his amendment. He thought his amendment such a good one that it would be adopted unanimously, even though he were not present. I suggest that the question on the amendment be put, so Members of the Senate can do as they please respecting a unanimous vote for his amendment, as hoped for by the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I now call up the amendment which I caused to be placed on the table on May 2, and ask if the Chair will be kind enough to have the clerk read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 4, it is proposed to amend section 6 by inserting the word "public" between the words "for" and "elementary."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum? The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is a very important one, and before he begins discussing it, I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum, if he will yield to me for that purpose.

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska for that purpose, with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With that understanding, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Johnson, Colo.	Myers
Baldwin	Johnson, Tex.	Neely
Brewster	Johnston, S. C.	O'Conor
Bridges	Kefauver	O'Mahoney
Byrd	Kilgore	Reed
Chapman	Knowland	Robertson
Cordon	Langer	Russell
Donnell	Long	Saltonstall
Ellender	McCarthy	Schoeppel
Ferguson	McClellan	Smith, Maine
Flanders	McFarland	Sparkman
George	McGrath	Taft
Gillette	McKellar	Taylor
Gurney	McMahon	Thomas, Utah
Hendrickson	Magnuson	Thye
Hill	Martin	Tydings
Hoey	Miller	Wherry
Humphrey	Morse	Wiley
Hunt	Mundt	Young
Ives	Murray

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL].

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield if I may do so without losing my position on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Missouri may yield for that purpose.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it may appear of record that the subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee investigating the Malmedy matter is holding a hearing this afternoon; that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], and the junior Senator from Connecticut are engaged in that hearing; and that we have unanimous consent of the Senate to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The RECORD will so indicate.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, may I have the privilege of having my amendment again stated by the clerk?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 4, it is proposed to amend section 6 by inserting the word "public" between the words "for" and "elementary."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the title of Senate bill 246 reads as follows: "A bill (S. 246) to authorize the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in financing a minimum foundation education program of public elementary and secondary schools, and in reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools, for the general welfare, and for other purposes."

It will be observed that in reading the title I have, in each of the two places in which the word "public" appears in the title, emphasized the appearance of that word therein by my voice. The fact that the word "public" appears in the title is to my mind of very great importance in determining the advisability or nonadvisability of adopting the amendment which I have proposed, which amendment would cause to be inserted that very word, namely, the word "public," between the words "for" and "elementary" on page 8, line 4 of the bill.

Not only does the word "public" appear in the two instances noted in the title of the bill, but it is of particular interest to observe that the same word "public" is mentioned in 31 places in the body of the bill, and that that word appears in each of those 31 instances as a part of the expression "public elementary school," "public secondary school," "public elementary," "public secondary schools," "public school jurisdictions," "public education agencies," "public schools," "public school jurisdiction," or "public education agency."

Yet, Mr. President, in the clause of the bill which designates the expenditures for which funds shall under the bill be available for disbursement, the word "public" is omitted.

It is of further interest to observe that in the very section of the bill in which appears the clause to which I have referred, in which clause the word "public" is omitted, the very selfsame word "public" appears twice shortly in advance of the portion of the bill which appears at line 4 on page 8.

It is not strange, Mr. President, in view of this extraordinary omission of the word "public" at the place indicated, that there appears in the Christian Century of March 23, 1949, a most interesting article entitled "A Weasel Omission." The article begins with these three sentences:

> Theodore Roosevelt coined the expression "the weasel word." A "weasel word" is one which by juxtaposition with a meaningful word sucks the meaning out of it. But the deliberate omission of a word in a certain context may sometimes perform the same trick.

Later in the article, after quoting this very section 6 to which my amendment applies, the writer of the article says:

> The absence of the word "public" in the place indicated above is a weasel omission. It sucks the meaning out of the purpose of the bill, as that purpose is consistently and meticulously guarded at every other point throughout the entire text. This weasel omission points the bill away from public education and makes possible the use of Federal money in aid of parochial schools in those States where the laws permit such use.

Mr. President, I hasten to mention that by quoting the word "weasel," I mean in no sense any dishonest or tricky imputation, for it was clearly the intention of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare to omit that word, and that was done because of the views which that committee almost unanimously held. I use the word "almost" in that connection because I think I was the only member of the committee who voted in favor of an amendment designed to effect, generally speaking—with one rather notable exception—the purposes of the amendment which we are now discussing.

Under section 6 of the bill there is set forth the provision entitled "Availability of Appropriations." Obviously, that section constitutes the very heart of this bill, for although the bill elsewhere authorizes appropriations and refers to the mechanics of certification, payment, apportionment, and so forth, yet unless there be contained in the bill a section providing for the availability of such appropriations, the passage of the bill would be only an idle gesture.

So section 6, vitally important as it is, is the one in which it is of tremendous importance that the word "public" be used, if in fact the purpose of the bill is—as stated in the title—to authorize the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in financing a minimum foundation education program of public elementary and secondary schools, and in reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools, for the general welfare, and for other purposes.

Again, Mr. President, by my intonation I have emphasized as well as I could, and I now emphasize for the RECORD by my words, the fact that the bill contains in its title that expression in which the word "public" appears twice.

Yet what does section 6—the very heart of the measure, as I have indicated—say? It says this:

> SEC. 6. In order more nearly to equalize educational opportunities, the funds paid to a State from the funds appropriated under section 3 of this act shall be available for disbursement by the State educational authority, either directly or through payments to local public-school jurisdictions or other State public-education agencies, for any current expenditure—

For what? Not for public elementary or secondary school purposes exclusively, for the word "public" is not to be found in this section between the words "for" and "elementary"; but after the recital, twice contained in that section, of the word "public", yet when we reach the vital inner core of the heart of the bill, designating the current expenditures for which these funds may be disbursed, section 6 says, as the writer of the editorial to which I have referred has indicated—> for elementary- or secondary-school purposes for which educational revenues derived from State or local sources may legally and constitutionally be expended in such State.

Obviously the writer of the editorial in the Christian Century is correct in pointing out the fact that the absence of the word "public" does, to quote him again—> suck the meaning out of the purpose of the bill, as that purpose is consistently and meticulously guarded at every other point throughout the entire text.

Mr. President, after my amendment is placed in effect—and it provides for the insertion of the word "public" between the words "for" and "elementary"—the current expenditures for which the bill would permit disbursement of these funds will be for "public elementary or secondary school purposes for which educational revenues derived from State or local sources may legally and constitutionally be expended in such State."

Again, Mr. President, I have emphasized by my voice, and I do now by these words which will appear in the printed RECORD, the word "public," which will appear in section 6 if my amendment be adopted. Indeed, Mr. President, the only change produced by my amendment will be the insertion of the word "public" in section 6.

Under the bill without my amendment the purposes for which the disbursement of Federal funds under the terms of Senate bill 246 could be made could include both public elementary or secondary school purposes and nonpublic elementary or secondary school purposes.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAPMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I would very much prefer to complete my argument without interruption, rather than to yield at this time.

Mr. FLANDERS. My question relates to a part of the argument.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I would prefer, if I may do so without impoliteness, to have the Senator permit me to proceed with my argument, and when I conclude it I shall be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. President, among the nonpublic elementary or secondary school purposes for which the disbursement of the funds provided under the bill may be made, unless my amendment is adopted, are religious nonpublic elementary or secondary school purposes, provided that such purposes are those for which "educational revenues derived from State or local sources may legally and constitutionally be expended in such State."

In 1948, I submitted and argued, and there was voted upon by the Senate, an amendment to Senate bill 472. In many respects, that amendment was similar to the amendment I now offer to Senate bill 246; in fact, in some respects, the amendments are identical. That amendment, submitted in 1948, provided for striking out the words "for which educational revenues derived from State or local sources may legally and constitutionally be expended in such State," and would have inserted in lieu of those words a colon and thereafter the following:

> Provided, That no funds appropriated under this act shall be disbursed in any State for the support or benefit of any sectarian or private school.

Mr. President, the amendment I have just quoted was opposed at that time by the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] because of the fact, as I understood, that he feared and, in fact, believed that the amendment would prevent the payment of funds to academies in the State of Vermont, which academies were used in that State for the purpose of educating children. He pointed out that the citizens of Vermont have, scattered throughout their State in the small towns, numerous small high schools or "academies," as they are called. He informed us that they are financed partly by private funds, by endowment. He stated that some of them are a hundred years or more old. The towns in which they are located utilize them as the local high school. They serve the purpose of a high school, so he stated. The town is required by State law to pay tuition to the academies which are located within their boundaries. Thousands of boys and girls have received a high school education by attending these—I am quoting his language—"technically private but actually public schools."

Said the senior Senator from Vermont:

> If it were not for the privilege of attending these schools many of our children would never get to high school at all. Some of the towns where they are located are many miles from the nearest public high schools.

Mr. President, the amendment of last year prohibiting the disbursement of any fund appropriated under the act in any States for the support or benefit of any sectarian or private school may well have prohibited the payment of any such funds to the academies to which the Senator from Vermont alluded. To my mind the amendment which I have offered this year, and which I am now arguing, answers the point which was made by the Senator from Vermont. I may say to the Senate, as I do say, that the reason for offering the amendment in the form I have this year, is in order to meet the very objection to which the Senator from Vermont alluded last year. As I see it, the new amendment would not prohibit payment to the academies in Vermont, for I see no reason why Vermont or any other State could not carry on public-school purposes by engaging the use of facilities or the services of teachers in private academies. It will be observed that in the excerpt which I read from the remarks of the Senator from Vermont last year, he states expressly that the academies are "technically private but actually public schools."

So, Mr. President, the amendment which I have now offered and which would provide simply that the funds which may be disbursed may be for any current expenditure for public elementary or secondary school purposes, and so forth, to my mind would not prevent the application of any of those funds to the academies to which the senior Senator from Vermont last year alluded.

What is the effect of the amendment which I have offered? I have indicated that its effect is to grant Federal funds for disbursement for current expenditure for public—I emphasize the word "public"—elementary or secondary school purposes, and no other. At the risk of repetition I say that under the amendment, no moneys are to be used except for public-school purposes. I want it perfectly clear that that is the intent of the amendment.

Why should not moneys be given by the bill to any nonpublic school? Such nonpublic schools may be divided into two groups: One, private nonsectarian schools; the other, sectarian schools. As to moneys to be given from Federal funds to private nonsectarian schools, if, for illustration, any Member of the Senate were the proprietor of a school, whether conducted for or without financial profit, I take it that to give money to such a private school, nonsectarian as it is, is subject to two fundamental objections; at least, under the bill as written.

In the first place, such a gift to a private school would be contrary to the expressed purpose of the bill as set forth in the title, that is to say, "to assist States and Territories in financing a program of public elementary and secondary schools, and in reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools, for the general welfare, and for other purposes."

In the second place, a gift to such a private school, even though nonsectarian, is objectionable on principle, as I see it, because I think for the Federal Government to make gifts to individuals is highly opposed to public policy.

We have illustrations in our own midst of gifts having been made, at least nominally so, as for illustration, to a servant of the Senate who has served with distinction throughout a period of years. For such gifts I can see some justification, a proper justification. As for instance, in the case of the old gentleman known to the Senator from Alabama, who is now listening so courteously to me, who served in the Senate for many, many years, now, because of infirmity, is compelled to retire. I can see how under circumstances such as that it is possible and advisable from the standpoint, even of encouraging others to work for us to give something for which we have not made a contractural obligation. But, Mr. President, as I see it, that is quite different from the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives of the United States undertaking to give to a private nonsectarian school moneys out of the Public Treasury.

As to the second class of nonpublic schools, namely, sectarian schools, as I see it, there are three fundamental objections to the use of any funds under Senate bill 246 for that class of nonpublic schools, namely, sectarian schools. As is the case with respect to nonsectarian schools, such utilization of funds for sectarian school purposes would be contrary to the expressed purpose of the bill, as set forth in the title, which I have read, the assistance of States and Territories in financing "a program of public elementary and secondary schools, and in reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools, for the general welfare, and for other purposes." Not only would the gift of moneys to a sectarian school be contrary to the expressed purpose of the bill, but in addition, just as is true in the case of private nonsectarian schools, it is objectionable on considerations of public policy to give public funds to private recipients.

But, Mr. President, there is a third, a very fundamental reason, which in my opinion is applicable to gifts of moneys from the Federal Treasury to sectarian schools. That is the fact that such a gift is violative of public policy for at least two reasons. I am not at the moment discussing the constitutional phase of the question. The points to which I refer with respect to public policy are these: First, to give such funds to a sectarian school would be to permit moneys derived from people of all religious beliefs—yes, or, in part, from people of no religious beliefs—to be used for the teaching of religious views held by specific groups. Thus it would follow that moneys paid into the Public Treasury by people of all religious beliefs, and by people in some instances, at any rate, of no religious beliefs, would be used for the teaching of religious views held by only a part of the people, and perhaps even contrary to the beliefs of other groups of the people.

In the second place, Mr. President, to permit moneys to be granted from the Treasury of the United States to sectarian schools would bring it about that if some sectarian schools are supported by public funds, other groups would doubtless ask that they also be supported by public funds.

Mrs. Agnes Meyer, of Washington, D. C., whose name is well known, not only in this Capitol, but elsewhere, writing in the March 1948 issue of the Reader's Digest, at page 68, says:

> Public support of one sectarian school system would bring many others into existence, thus undermining our public education system and the future development of our Republic.

But, Mr. President, not only do these two reasons of public policy to which I have referred argue irresistibly against the propriety and advisability of our public funds being paid to sectarian schools, but I submit a further reason in opposition to such payment, namely, not only is the giving of money to sectarian schools contrary to public policy, from the standpoint of the public itself, but it is also true that from the standpoint of the sectarian schools themselves support by public funds of sectarian schools is harmful; that is, harmful to the sectarian schools themselves. This follows from the fact that there is a very real danger that the Government which provides the funds will ultimately, even if not at the outset, attach conditions to the use of such funds. Thus it is reasonable to expect Government interference ultimately with the policies of such sectarian schools themselves.

In connection with the consideration of the harmful effects which may be expected from the application of public funds to sectarian schools by both the public and by such schools, I call attention to the observation made by the minority, namely, 4 out of 9 of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, in Everson against Board of Education, decided February 10, 1943, No. 52, October term, 1946. At page 13 of the minority opinion of Mr. Justice Rutledge for himself and the other three dissenting members of the Court, the writer called attention to the objection of Madison and his coworkers to the imposition of a tax for religion. Mr. Justice Rutledge pointed out that the opposition was not to small tithes—and I emphasize the word "small"—but "it was to any tithes whatsoever."

Then follows this very significant sentence bearing on the proposition to which I am now addressing myself:

> And the principle was as much to prevent the interference of our law in religion as to restrain religious intervention in political matters.

Thus it is that Justice Rutledge, for himself and the three other dissenting Justices, emphasized the point that the imposition of a tax for religion is injurious not only to the State but to the religious groups themselves.

Mr. President, someone may say that the quotation which I have just stated comes from the minority of the Supreme Court; but, to my mind, the decision of the Court clearly shows that on this point there is a unanimity of opinion between the minority and the majority.

In connection with the harmful effects which may be expected by both the public and the sectarian schools from the application of public funds to such schools, attention is called to the fact that the spokesman for the majority Justices in the Everson case, namely, Mr. Justice Black, sets forth, from the decision of the Court of Appeals of South Carolina in the Harmon case and cites as having been quoted with approval by the United States Supreme Court in Watson v. Jones (13 Wall. 679, 730), the following observation:

> The structure of our Government has for the preservation of civil liberty rescued the temporal institutions from religious interference. On the other hand—

Continuing, says the Court:

> On the other hand, it has secured religious liberty from the invasions of civil authority.

Thus it is that the spokesman for the majority of the Supreme Court in the Everson case indicates very clearly that the Supreme Court of the United States believes that the imposition of taxes for religion and the commingling of State and religious organizations is injurious both to the religious groups and to the Nation itself.

Mr. President, the expression of views which I have made thus far today is by no means confined to the Member of the Senate who now addresses it. Indeed, nearly every State in the Union has officially expressed itself to the effect that it is advisable either to prohibit or to restrict the use of public funds for sectarian school purposes.

It is very interesting to observe the development of the history of public education in the United States. In the early history of the Nation the education of the youth was a function carried on by the church. Professor Cubberley, dean emeritus, School of Education, Leland Stanford University, says:

> In Colonial times, too, and for some decades into our national period, the warmest advocates of the establishment of schools were those who had in view the needs of the church. Then gradually the emphasis shifted, as we have shown in chapter 4, to the needs of the State, and a new class of advocates of public education now arose. Still later the emphasis has been shifted to industrial and civic educational needs, and the religious importance has been almost completely eliminated.

I pause, Mr. President, to remark that the edition from which I am quoting is that of 1934. I now resume the quotation:

> This change is known as the secularization of America education. It also required many a bitter struggle, and was accomplished by the different States but slowly. The two main factors which served to produce this change have been (1) the conviction that the life of the Republic demands an educated and intelligent citizenship and, hence, the general education of all in the common schools controlled by the State, and (2) a great diversity of religious beliefs among our people which forced tolerance and religious freedom through a consideration of the rights of minorities.

Continuing, Professor Cubberley says, and I call special attention to this:

> The secularization of education with us must not be regarded either as a deliberate or a wanton violation of the rights of the church, but rather as an unavoidable incident connected with the coming to self-consciousness and self-government of great people.
> So long as there was little intercommunication and migration, and the people of a community remained fairly homeogeneous, it was perfectly natural that the common religious faith of the people should enter into the instruction of the school. When the schools were purely local and voluntary this was not a serious objection. With the rise of State support, and the widening of the units for maintenance and control from the lonely community or district to the town, the county, and the State, the situation changed. With the development of the West, after 1800, with its indifference as to distinctions still powerful in the older States of the East; the coming of foreign immigration, which began to be marked after about 1825; and the intermingling of peoples of different faiths in the rapidly evolving cities and towns, religious uniformity ceased to exist. Majority rule now for a time followed, but this was soon forced to give way to the still more important governmental principle of religious freedom.

Then, Mr. President, the writer Professor Cubberley concludes this observation to which I refer as follows:

> As necessity gradually compelled the State to provide education for its children, sectarian differences made it increasingly evident that the education provided must be nonsectarian in character.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate by extensive consideration of the historical development of this matter, but I think it is of importance in the development of this argument at least to mention a portion of the history of the development of public education in the United States. I quote again from Professor Cubberley at page 237. He is speaking at the moment of the conflict which was then on in Massachusetts on educational matters, and he said:

> By 1840 the Massachusetts conflict was on, and in that year Governor Seward, of New York, urged the establishment of schools in the cities of the State in which the teachers should be of the same language and religion as the foreign patrons. This dangerous proposal encouraged the Catholics, and they immediately applied to the New York City council for a division of the city school fund, and, on being refused, carried their demand to the legislature of the State. A Hebrew and a Scotch Presbyterian Church also applied for their share, and supported the Catholics in their demands. On the other hand, the Methodists, Episcopalians, Baptists, Dutch Reformed, and Reformed Presbyterians united with the Public School Society in opposing all such division of the funds.
> The legislature deferred action until 1842, and then did the unexpected thing. The heated discussion of the question in the city and in the legislature had made it evident that, while it might not be desirable to continue to give funds to a privately organized corporation, to divide them among the quarreling and envious religious sects would be much worse. The result was that the legislature created for the city a city board of education, to establish real public schools, * * * by enacting that no portion of the school funds was in the future to be given to any school in which "any religious sectarian doctrine or tenet should be taught, inculcated, or practiced."

Mr. President, I think it is of some interest to observe that this experience, in which one denomination after another sought to secure benefits, pointedly illustrates the wisdom of the observation quoted this afternoon from Mrs. Agnes Meyer, "Public support of one sectarian school system would bring many others into existence, thus undermining our public educational system, and the future development of our Republic."

Mr. President, Professor Cubberley further says, at page 239 of his work, Public Education in the United States, after reciting numerous other incidents and facts intermediate from where I left off:

> To settle the question in a final manner legislatures now began to propose constitutional amendments to the people of their several States which forbade a division or a diversion of the funds, and these were almost uniformly adopted at the first election after being proposed. The States, with the date of adoption of such a constitutional provision, are—

Mr. President, at the risk of some tediousness, I desire to read the list, because I think it is extremely interesting and important. The professor divides his book into two columns, one under the headline "States amending constitution." In other words, they already had constitutions, and they then amended the constitutions so as to "forbid a division or a diversion of the funds," meaning thereby, as I understand, to sectarian schools. I read from the list:

States amending constitution

New Jersey	1844
Michigan	1850
Ohio	1851
Indiana	1851
Massachusetts	1855
Iowa	1857
Mississippi	1868
South Carolina	1868
Arkansas	1868
Illinois	1870
Pennsylvania	1872
West Virginia	1872
Alabama	1875
Missouri	1875
North Carolina	1876
Texas	1876
Minnesota	1877
Georgia	1877
California	1879
Louisiana	1879
Florida	1885
Delaware	1897

The second column of Professor Cubberley's work, at page 239, contains a somewhat shorter list entitled "Adopted When Admitted." In other words, as an initial proposition, in these States whose names I shall read the constitutions contained a constitutional provision which forbade, as I understand the Professor's work, a division or diversion of the funds.

	Adopted when admitted
Wisconsin	1848
Oregon	1857
Kansas	1859
Nevada	1864
Nebraska	1867
Colorado	1876
North Dakota	1889
South Dakota	1889
Montana	1889
Washington	1889
Idaho	1890
Wyoming	1890
Utah	1896
Oklahoma	1907
New Mexico	1912
Arizona	1912

The States, the names of which I have read, total 38, and, as I have indicated, include those amending their constitutions and those which adopted a provision of this kind upon their admission.

Mr. President, Professor Cubberley referred, as Senators have doubtless noted, to the year 1875 in the course of his tabulation, and I think it is particularly of interest in the United States Congress to observe this historical fact which he recites at page 240 of his work:

In 1875 President Grant, in his message to Congress, urged the submission of an amendment to the Federal Constitution making it the duty of the States to support free public schools, free from religious teaching, and forbidding the diversion of school funds to church or sectarian purposes. In a later message he renewed the recommendation, but Congress took no action because—because it considered such action unnecessary. That the people had thoroughly decided that the school funds must be kept intact and the system of free public schools preserved may be inferred from the fact that no State admitted to the Union after 1853—

I read that again—that no State admitted to the Union after 1858, excepting West Virginia, failed to insert such a provision in its first State constitution.

Professor Cubberley continues:

Hence the question may be regarded as a settled one in our American States. Our people mean to keep the public-school system united as one State school system, well realizing that any attempt to divide the schools among the different religious denominations (the World Almanac for 1930 lists 79 different denominations and 160 different sects in the United States) could only lead to inefficiency and educational chaos.

So, Mr. President, the opinion which I have indicated in this historical development is the opinion not of the individual who now addresses the Senate alone, but is the official opinion as expressed by the people of the great majority of the States of the Union in their various State actions and, yes, not merely by some perfunctory State expression, but by the provision of the fundamental law of each of those States, namely, their constitutions.

In May of 1943 there was issued by the research division of the National Education Association of the United States, a pamphlet which sets forth under the heading of "Constitutional prohibitions against State aid to private schools" one or more excerpts from the constitutions of each of 46 of the 48 States. I may say that in the presentation of the amendment of last year I secured unanimous consent for insertion in the RECORD of these excerpts. There was also inserted the introduction which precedes them. They appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 93, part 3, at pages 3591 to 3594, inclusive.

Mr. President, I regard it of such importance that we have connectedly at this time in the Eighty-first Congress of the United States this information, without the necessity of going back to and hunting up a previous book, that I ask unanimous consent that the same excerpts and introduction which appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 93, part 3, at pages 3591 to 3594, inclusive, taken from the pamphlet of the National Education Association of the United States, be here incorporated as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The present report is an attempt to list constitutional provisions directly or indirectly permitting or prohibiting State aid to private schools and the court decisions which have interpreted these provisions.

Part I lists State by State the constitutional prohibitions against aid to private schools. Following the constitutional provisions are listed in each State the judicial decisions, briefly annotated. These court decisions have interpreted these provisions when situations have arisen which have been challenged as violating the prohibitions. The older cases deal with direct aid by way of paying the salaries of teachers in private schools or using private-school buildings for public-school classes. Seldom do such cases occur in recent years, although there was an Iowa case in 1940. Nowadays the more common issues are transportation and textbooks authorized by statutes which permit the extension of these services to pupils attending private schools.

Public schools were defined as those established under the laws, usually regulated in matters of detail by local authorities in various districts, towns, or counties, and maintained at public expense by taxation and open without charge to children of all residents of towns or other district. (Quoted from Litchman v. Shannon (155 P. 783 (1916).)

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, one of the citations which I read from Professor Cubberley's book indicates very clearly that the movement toward the secular school and away from the carrying on by the church of the function of educating the young did not arise from hostility to religion as such. The amendment which I now propose and argue for is not brought about remotely, or in any manner, directly, indirectly, or otherwise, by any hostility to religion or to any branch of religion or to any church or organization. In the excerpts which I read a little while ago from Professor Cubberley along this line was this one sentence at page 231 of his book:

The secularization of education with us must not be regarded either as a deliberate or a wanton violation of the rights of the church, but rather as an unavoidable incident connected with the coming to self-consciousness and self-government of a great people.

But Professor Cubberley has something further to say upon this point. At page 232 he quotes from Brown—S. W.—and he says:

As Brown (S. W.) has so well said it, "Differences of religious belief and a sound regard on the part of the State for individual freedom in religious matters, coupled with the necessity for centralization and uniformity, rather than hostility to religion as such lie at the bottom of the movement toward the secular school.

Mr. President, there was mentioned this afternoon by the distinguished senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Mc-

MAHON] the McCollum case, or, as I believe he termed it, the Champaign case, which arose in connection with the Board of Education of School District No. 71, Champaign County, Ill. In connection with the point that the movement toward the secular school and away from the carrying on by the church of the function of educating the young did not arise from hositlity to religion as such, I ask to read the following from the majority opinion in the case of McCollum against the Board of Education, which is the case to which the Senator from Connecticut referred, namely, People of the State of Illinois ex rel. McCollum against the Board of Education of School District No. 71, Champaign County, Ill., et al., Supreme Court of the United States, No. 90, October term, 1947, appearing at page 4 of the opinion of Mr. Justice Frankfurter, in which Mr. Justice Jackson, Mr. Justice Rutledge, and Mr. Justice Burton joined. I may say that this was not a dissenting opinion. It was a further opinion concurring in the outcome of the case. Said Mr. Justice Frankfurter on behalf of himself and these other three Justices:

Separation in the field of education, then, was not imposed upon unwilling States by force of superior law. In this respect, the fourteenth amendment merely reflected a principle then dominant in our national life. To the extent that the Constitution thus made it binding upon the States, the basis of the restriction is the whole experience of our people. Zealous watchfulness against fusion of secular and religious activities by government itself, through any of its instruments, but especially through its educational agencies, was the democratic response of the American community to the particular needs of a young and growing nation, unique in the composition of its people. A totally different situation elsewhere, as illustrated, for instance, by the English provisions for religious education in State-maintained schools, only serves to illustrate that free societies are not cast in one mold. (See the Education Act of 1944, 7 and 8 Geo. VI, ch. 31.) Different institutions evolve from different historic circumstances.

Continuing, Mr. Justice Frankfurter said:

It is pertinent to remind that the establishment of this principle of separation in the field of education was not due to any decline in the religious beliefs of the people. Horace Mann was a devout Christian, and the deep religious feeling of James Madison is stamped upon the Remonstrance. The secular public school did not imply indifference to the basic role of religion in the life of the people nor rejection of religious education as a means of fostering it.

The claims of religion were not minimized by refusing to make the public schools agencies for their assertion. The nonsectarian or secular public school was the means of reconciling freedom in general with religious freedom. The sharp confinement of the public schools to secular education was a recognition of the need of a democratic society to educate its children, insofar as the State undertook to do so, in an atmosphere free from pressures in a realm in which pressures are most resisted and where conflicts are most easily and most bitterly engendered. Designed to serve as perhaps the most powerful agency for promoting cohesion among a heterogeneous democratic people, the public school must keep scrupulously free from entanglement in the strife of sects. The preservation of the community from divisive conflicts, of Government from irreconcilable pressures by religious groups, of religion from censorship and coercion however subtly exercised, requires strict confinement of the State to instruction other than religious, leaving to the individual's church and home indoctrination in the faith of his choice.

This development of the public school as a symbol of our secular unity was not a sudden achievement nor attained without violent conflict. While in small communities of comparatively homogeneous religious beliefs, the need for absolute separation presented no urgencies, elsewhere the growth of the secular school encountered the resistance of feeling strongly engaged against it. But the inevitability of such attempts is the very reason for constitutional provisions primarily concerned with the protection of minority groups. And such sects are shifting groups, varying from time to time, and place to place, thus representing in their totality the common interest of the Nation.

Enough has been said to indicate that we are dealing not with a full-blown principle, not one having the definiteness of a surveyor's metes and bounds. But by 1875—

I digress to comment again upon the fact that that was the year in which President Grant made his suggestion to Congress—

but by 1875 the separation of public education from church entanglements, of the state from the teaching of religion, was firmly established in the consciousness of the Nation. In that year President Grant made his famous remarks to the convention of the Army of the Tennessee:

"Encourage free schools and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated for the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither the State nor the Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the church, and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the church and state forever separated." (The President's Speech at Des Moines (22 Catholic World, 433, 434-85 (1876)).

Continuing, Justice Frankfurter says:

So strong was this conviction, that rather than rest on the comprehensive prohibitions of the first and fourteenth amendments, President Grant urged that there be written into the United States Constitution particular elaborations, including a specific prohibition against the use of public funds for sectarian education, such as had been written into many State constitutions. By 1894, in urging the adoption of such a provision in the New York constitution, Elihu Root was able to summarize a century of the Nation's history: "It is not a question of religion, or of creed, or of party; it is a question of declaring and maintaining the great American principle of eternal separation between Church and State" (Root, Addresses on Governments and Citizenship, 137, 140). The extent to which this principle was deemed a presupposition of our constitutional system is strikingly illustrated by the fact that every State admitted into the Union since 1876 was compelled by Congress to write into its constitution a requirement that it maintain a school system "free from sectarian control."

Statutory references are cited by the Supreme Court for this assertion by Mr. Justice Frankfurter.

Because of the fact that my own home is in the State of Missouri, I should like at this point to read a portion of the new constitution of Missouri, which is a comparatively short paragraph on the subject of public aid for religion, religious purposes, and institutions, the constitution having been adopted only 4 years ago, or thereabouts—in the year 1945. My recollection is that the provisions I am about to read are substantially the same—perhaps exactly the same—as those in the constitution of 1875, though I may be in error in my recollection. The language is as follows:

SEC. 8. Prohibition of public aid for religious purposes and institutions. Neither the general assembly or any county, city, town, township, school district, or other municipal corporation shall ever make an appropriation or pay from any public fund whatever anything in aid of any religious creed, church, or sectarian purpose, or to help to support or sustain any public or private school, academy, seminary, college, university, or other institution of learning controlled by any religious creed, church, or sectarian denomination whatever. Nor shall any grant or donation of personal property or real estate ever be made by the State or any county, city, town, or other municipal corporation for any religious creed, church, or sectarian purpose whatever.

In February 1946, the National Education Association, which, as we of course realize, is a great organization of those who are engaged in the profession of teaching, issued a notable research bulletin consisting of about 44 pages, entitled "The State and Sectarian Education," being volume 24, part 1. The foreword to that research bulletin is signed by a gentleman who is doubtless well known to many Members of the Congress because of his distinction and his industry and integrity. I refer to Mr. Willard E. Givens, executive secretary of the National Education Association. The foreword is so clear and so modern—1946—and conveys so succinctly the views therein expressed, and comes from such an authoritative source, the executive secretary of the National Education Association, that I take the liberty at this moment of reading the foreword into my remarks. Mr. Givens says:

Perhaps no public moneys are collected, banked, spent, and audited with greater care than are those allotted to public education. Rarely indeed are charges made, and even more rarely are claims proved, that any school authority has failed to use school funds in accordance with law. This record of scrupulous observance of the law is a praiseworthy one. One reason why the law has been so carefully observed is that the people in each State have been vigilant. They have agreed that the State and its subdivisions should, at public expense, provide not less than elementary and secondary school opportunities for every child.

Mr. President, I pause at this point to state that after the argument made earlier today, in which the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] called attention to the fact that every State in the Union provides for its children public schools which can be availed of, if desired, I was greatly impressed by the fact that a gentleman met me outside of this Chamber, on the steps leading to this great building, and commented that he had been pleased that that notation had been made in the argument. It emphasizes the fact, as Mr. Givens puts it, that—

The people in each State • • • have agreed that the State and its subdivisions should at public expense provide not less than elementary- and secondary-school opportunities for every child.

Then, proceeding, Mr. Givens says in this foreword—and I call particular attention to this sentence:

They have insisted—

In other words, the people in each State have insisted—that the money appropriated for public education shall not be spent for private or church schools, no matter how socially worthy. Many State legislatures and courts have repeatedly set forth these traditionally American principles. It would be misleading, however—to assume that such American principles sprang into being all at one time. The standard that public funds should not be used to support any religion has been repeated again and again in State constitutions. But it has taken detailed legislation and court decisions to clarify the specific application of the general principle to time, place, and conditions.

Mr. President, I call especial attention to that last sentence, namely, that—

It has taken detailed legislation and court decisions to clarify the specific application of the general principle to time, place, and conditions.

Because probably I shall refer to that statement again, somewhat later in my argument, in reference to certain decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Givens then says:

Furthermore, widespread as have been the restrictions against diverting public moneys to religious purposes, the principle continues to be challenged from time to time.

In recent years there have been several cases where the courts have appeared to rule that public funds could be used for pupils attending sectarian schools. Usually these cases have involved free text books and transportation. In some instances the courts maintained that the State laws as written did not forbid such aid. These cases illustrate the need for reexamination of the legal situation in every State, as is done in this bulletin.

In seeking to restrain the use of public-school funds, educators do not oppose the sectarian-school movement—

Says Mr. Givens; and Mr. President, I emphasize this statement. He further says:

Those who wish to support such schools in our country can do so without restriction. They meet opposition, however, when they maintain that all citizens of a State should be taxed to support any type of sectarian education.

Mr. President, I digress to say that obviously similar opposition would be met with if it were maintained that all citizens of the United States who pay taxes should be taxed to support any type of sectarian education.

I resume reading the foreword by Mr. Givens:

Such efforts to direct public funds to sectarian schools weaken the financial support of public education which in many States is not adequate to provide acceptable public educational opportunities. To no small degree the strength of America today has come through a program of public education which has minimized differences and emphasized unity among all citizens of the United States.

This research bulletin summarizes the facts with respect to State assistance to nonpublic education. It reviews the constitutional, statutory, and judicial bases underlying many types of relationship between church and state with respect to education. It provides the basis for further study and discussion in every State.

WILLARD E. GIVENS,
Executive Secretary, National Education Association.

Mr. President, in the booklet to which I have referred—the February 1946 bulletin in which Mr. Givens' foreword appears—at page 11 appear these two significant sentences:

However, during this period—

The period referred to in the preceding observation—most of the States were including a constitutional provision prohibiting the use of tax revenues for sectarian purposes.

Then this sentence:

All States now so provide, directly or indirectly, except Maine and North Carolina, but in Arkansas, Iowa, and New Jersey the provisions are limited.

Mr. President, I digress at this point to observe that someone may suggest that if there are in practically all the States prohibitions against the use of public funds for sectarian purposes, it follows that in practically all the States Federal funds under Senate bill 246 will not be permitted to be used for sectarian schools. In answer to such a suggestion, I call attention to the fact that although there are, as I have stated, prohibitions in 46 of the 48 States, the National Education Association bulletin at page 43 states:

An appropriation of any public-school funds to a sectarian school would be unconstitutional in most States, and such an appropriation could not be made from certain funds in any State.

Mr. President, the word "any" and the word "certain" are italicized.

So the situation is, as pointed out in the bulletin, that an appropriation of public-school funds to a sectarian school can be made in some States from certain funds, even though there is a restriction, and thus a recognition, in the constitution of the State of the desirability of restricting such appropriations. Yet, Mr. President, as a matter of fact in every one of the minority of the States in which appropriations from certain funds—and I emphasize the word "certain"—can be made, I believe that if this bill shall pass in its present form, without the adoption of my amendment, undoubtedly an effort will be made to sustain the validity of the use of Federal funds for sectarian-school purposes; and in the second place, due to the differences in the statutes of the several States in this respect, separate litigation will be required to determine whether the Federal funds provided under this bill could be used in each respective State for sectarian schools.

Again I refer to the observation made by Mr. Givens, to which I paid special attention a little while ago:

It has taken detailed legislation and court decisions to clarify the specific application of the general principle to time, place, and conditions.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a pamphlet entitled "Higher Education for American Democracy." This is an official document; it is a report of the President's Commission on Higher Education—and by the word "President," I refer to the President of the United States—issued in Washington, D. C., in December 1947, being volume V of the Commission's report. The letter of transmittal is quite brief, and I should like to read it. It comes from a very distinguished educator, George F. Zook, Chairman of that Commission, and widely known throughout the Nation:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 11, 1947.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On July 13, 1946, you established the President's Commission on Higher Education and charged its members with the task of examining the functions of higher education in our democracy and the means by which they can best be performed.

The Commission has completed its task and submits herewith a comprehensive report, Higher Education for American Democracy.

The magnitude of the issues involved prompted the Commission to incorporate its findings and recommendations in a series of six volumes, of which this is the fifth.

The Commission members and the staff are grateful for the opportunity which you have given us to explore so fully the future role of higher education, which is so closely identified with the welfare of our country and of the world.

Mr. President, the membership of the Commission speaks for itself. It consists, I think, of 28 members. I shall not read the list, but I ask leave at this point to have the list included in full in my remarks. It appears on one of the fly leaves of the booklet.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

President's Commission on Higher Education: George F. Zook, Chairman; Sarah G. Blanding; O. C. Carmichael; Arthur H. Compton; Henry A. Dixon; Milton S. Eisenhower; John R. Emens; Alvin C. Eurich; Douglas S. Freeman; Algo D. Henderson; Msgr. Frederick G. Hochwalt; Lewis W. Jones; Horace M. Kallen; Fred J. Kelly; Murray D. Lincoln; T. R. McConnell; Earl J. McGrath; Martin R. P. McGuire; Agnes Meyer (Mrs. Eugene); Harry K. Newburn; Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam; F. D. Patterson; Mark Starr; George D. Stoddard; Harold H. Swith; Ordway Tead; Goodrich C. White; Rabbi Stephen S. Wise; Francis J. Brown, executive secretary; A. B. Bonds, Jr., assistant executive secretary.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, from my observations you will have noted that this notable Commission was dealing not with elementary—yes; not even with secondary education—but with higher education. I suggest, not as an expert upon education but merely as an individual, that it would seem to me that, if there should be any distinction in the preservation of the separation of church and state as between elementary and secondary education on the one hand, and higher education on the other, the greater care should be bestowed upon elementary and secondary education. The boys and girls who have attained the age when they enter colleges and universities to receive higher education have at least progressed further, it is to be assumed, in their mental development than have the children who are in the elementary and secondary schools. I say, therefore, Mr. President, that, in my opinion, if there be any distinction in the care which should be bestowed to see that there shall be no intermingling of church and state in our schools, the greater part of that care should be bestowed upon the secondary and elementary schools.

But, Mr. President, this notable Commission, headed by Mr. Zook, appointed by the President, and reporting to him, considers, as you will note in a moment, that it is of high importance that the matter of separation shall be considered and observed in connection with higher education. I submit, a fortiori, that it should be considered with respect to elementary and secondary education. Here is the observation of the Commission to which I refer. It appears in bold-faced type at page 57 of the report:

Federal funds for the general support of current educational activities and for general capital-outlay purposes should be appropriated for use only—only in institutions under public control.

I emphasize the word "only"—

It will be observed that he is referring to Federal funds, and he is referring to the general support of current educational activities, and for general capital-outlay purposes. I pause to say that this bill, it will be observed, does not include capital-outlay purposes. I believe I am correct. But the writer of the report, and the report itself, lays down the proposition that Federal funds for such general support of current educational activities should be appropriated for use only in institutions under public control. I call particular attention to this italicized sentence, which appears a little later in the report:

Nevertheless, any diversion by Government of public funds to the general support of nonpublicly controlled educational institutions tends to deny the acceptance of the fundamental responsibility and to weaken the program of public education.

Mr. President, someone may say, "Well, this was a merely perfunctory observation." I am pleased to say that the report in itself negatives that idea, for not only had the period between July 13, 1946, and December 11, 1947, ensued between the time of the establishment of the Commission and the rendition of the report, but the fact that this problem was seriously considered to be involved in the whole subject matter of the report, I take it, appears from the fact that there was a dissent to the opinion expressed by the distinguished majority members of the Commission. Of the 28 members, 2 dissented, and those 2 were Msgr. Frederick G. Hochwalt and Martin R. P. McGuire. Monsignor Hochwalt is director of higher education of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and Dr. McGuire is, or was, dean of the Graduate School of the Catholic University of America. I do not mean by the word "was" to imply any possibility of his no longer being dean. I am not informed as to whether he is.

Mr. President, what was the reaction among the people of the Nation, or some of them at any rate, with respect to the report of the President's Commission on Higher Education? The Churchman, which is a religious publication, contained—and I quoted it last year—an article reading as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Action of President Truman's Commission on Higher Education to limit any Federal appropriations in aid of colleges and universities to public institutions was given warm approval by the recently formed Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State.

In a statement directed to Dr. George F. Zook, Chairman of the Commission * * * the church-state organization commended the Commission's recommendation "to exclude private and church schools."

It said: "We are greatly concerned that religious training shall be widely and effectively disseminated among the people, but we hold with you that provisions for such inculcation must be privately supplied."

"This does not mean," the statement warned, "that tax-supported schools must be hostile or indifferent to religion, lacking in moral values, and pagan or atheistic in character.

"We would deplore the day," it added, "when church schools come to lean on the Government as a financial prop."

Declaring that state-supported church schools "would spell the end of our public-school system," the organization further warned that "to divide state-supported education into sectarian school systems would divide American society itself into hostile sectarian camps, intensify sectarian intolerance, and thrust a religious issue permanently into the political arena from which our Constitution was designed to exclude it.

"Next to the Constitution itself, our public-school system has been our strongest bulwark against the development of religious intolerance in our political life."

So, Mr. President, the reaction, at least, from this one organization, will thus be noted.

On July 17, 1947, the American Unitarian Association addressed a letter to me. I assume it doubtless went to other Members of the Senate, perhaps to all of them. The letter reads as follows:

AMERICAN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION,
Boston, Mass., July 17, 1947.

Hon. FORREST C. DONNELL,
Senator from Missouri,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DONNELL: May we remind you, sir, that there is grave danger to the traditional and democratic principle of the separation of church and state in the amended Taft bill for $300,000,000 Federal aid to education. According to a late press release the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee has approved the bill on a basis which does not exclude nonpublic schools from financial aid under the bill, but leaves the question of distribution of such funds to private and religious schools to the discretion of the individual States.

Since a far greater number of nonpublic schools in the United States are parochial in nature, this bill, if passed in its present form, would be the beginning of the providing of public funds for church-operated schools.

We are deeply aware of, and sympathetic to, the financial needs of our American public school system, and hope that you will support the granting of aid to these institutions. But to give Federal funds to religious schools, whether Jewish, Catholic, or Protestant, is a direct violation of one of the fundamental tenets of our American democracy—a principle deemed important enough by our founding fathers that it was included in the first amendment to our United States Constitution.

We call your attention to the following resolution adopted at the one hundred and twenty-second annual meeting of the American Unitarian Association, composed of Unitarian churches in the United States and Canada, which passed without a dissenting vote on May 22, 1947:

"SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE

"Whereas the American Unitarian Association has always stood for the separation of church and state; and

"Whereas the traditional historic position of the United States since Thomas Jefferson articulated the principle of religious freedom for the Commonwealth of Virginia and the enactment of the first amendment to the Constitution has been to establish and maintain the separation of church and state; and

"Whereas there are pending at present certain Federal and State proposals to provide public funds for nonpublic schools; and

"Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States in a 5 to 4 opinion decided in the case of Arch Everson v. The Board of Education in the Township of Ewing that the legislature in the State of New Jersey was constitutionally within its rights in providing for the use of public funds for the transportation of pupils to other than public schools, but not including schools operating for profit; and

"Whereas this decision may be interpreted as establishing a precedent which places many problems involving the issue of State support of sectarian institutions squarely upon the individual States; be it therefore

"Resolved, That the American Unitarian Association, assembled in its one hundred and twenty-second annual meeting, calls upon all Americans, both within and without the churches, to oppose all encroachment upon the principle of the separation of church and state, including the action of legislatures (at present particularly in Illinois, Indiana, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, and New York), local school boards, and other policy-making instrumentalities of government; and be it further

"Resolved, That we urge those States whose constitutions do not now guarantee the separation of church and state to incorporate such guaranties by constitutional amendments; and be it finally

"Resolved, That the executive officers of the American Unitarian Association be instructed to seek active cooperation with other denominations and organizations for the purpose of promoting unity of action to this end."

Because we feel that S. 472, in its present form, is contrary to a functioning, democratic educational system, we ask you to support the Federal aid bill only after it has been amended to exclude public aid to nonpublic schools.

Respectfully,

MERRILL E. BUSH,
Director, Department of Adult Education and Social Relations.

(At this point Mr. DONNELL yielded to Mr. MCKELLAR for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 226, and debate ensued, which by order of the Senate, appears at the conclusion of Mr. DONNELL's speech. Mr. DONNELL also yielded to Mr. WHERRY, and debate ensued, which likewise appears at the conclusion of Mr. DONNELL's speech.)

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, there occurred in Atlantic City, N. J., in the month of March of last year, I believe, the seventy-fourth annual conference of the American Association of School Administrators. The magazine the Churchman, to which I recently referred, in its issue of March 15, 1948, contains an article headed "Public funds—School administrators oppose special aid." The article reads as follows:

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.—The use of public funds for "direct or indirect" support of church schools was opposed here by the seventy-fourth annual conference of the American Association of School Administrators.

The resolution, one of 22 introduced by a committee, declared:

"We believe the American tradition of separation of church and state should be vigorously and seriously safeguarded. We reassert the right of special-interest groups, including religious denominations, to maintain their own schools as long as such schools meet the standards defined by the State in which they are located.

"We believe that these separate schools should be financed entirely by their own supporters. We therefore oppose all efforts to devote public funds either to the direct or indirect support of such schools."

One session of the conference was devoted to a discussion of religious training in the schools, including the released-time plan. However, no resolution on this subject was introduced.

Mr. President, I am unable to vouch to the Senate as to whether the resolution which I have read was adopted. The heading of the article reads, as I have indicated, "Public funds—School administrators oppose special aid." I call attention to the article itself, which merely states that the use of public funds for the direct or indirect support of church schools was opposed by the seventy-fourth annual conference of the American Association of School Administrators, and that the resolution to which I have referred, being one of 22 resolutions introduced by a committee, declared as I have read. I am unable to state whether the conference approved it, or whether that was the action of the committee.

An organization known as the National League Opposed to Sectarian Appropriations is referred to in a letter bearing the signature of Frank J. Batcheller, chairman of the national committee. I quote from an article appearing in the Christian Science Monitor of March 27, 1947, as follows:

BOSTON, March 27.—Strong protests against the inclusion in the Federal education bill now before Congress of any clause authorizing or permitting the use of public funds for the benefit of sectarian schools were mailed to all Members of Congress today by the National Committee of the League Opposed to Sectarian Appropriations.

Letters were addressed from the League's headquarters in Cambridge, Mass., calling upon the people's representatives to maintain the great fundamental American principle of complete separation of church and State by denying support of sectarian institutions at the expense of the general public.

The letter, bearing the signature of Frank J. Batcheller, chairman of the national committee, follows:

As chairman of the National Committee of the League Opposed to Sectarian Appropriations, an organization whose membership exceeds 8,000,000 citizens, and whose proposed constitutional amendment to prohibit all sectarian appropriatons has been unanimously endorsed by other organizations whose total membership is more than 20,000,000, I emphatically protest against the inclusion in the Federal education bill of any clause or provision authorizing or permitting the use for the benefit of sectarian schools of any money appropriated by this bill.

The appropriation of public money for sectarian schools, whether by Federal, State, or municipal governments, is a clear violation of the great basic American principle of the complete separation of church and state. This is equally true whether the schools in question are aided by direct payment of public money or by the furnishing of free transportation, free textbooks, or free supplies of any nature for their pupils. Any attempts to secure such grants or aid should be decisively defeated.

We are just as strongly opposed to any Federal education bill that would aid sectarian schools only in those States that make grants for the benefit of such institutions as we are to any legislative acts that would assist those schools in all States.

Because a number of States, as a result of political manipulation and political pressure, have violated the principle of the separation of church and state by furnishing free transportation for the pupils of parochial schools in no way justifies or excuses the Federal Government doing the same thing.

Mr. President, in the issue of the Churchman for March 15, 1948, are two articles, each of which I should like to place in the RECORD. One is in favor of the use of public funds for private institutions. I wish to place it in the RECORD in order that we may have here some expression from someone who favors such use, subject to our analysis.

The first article is headed "Deterioration—Public schools suffer if funds are diverted." It reads as follows:

CHICAGO.—The widespread deterioration of the public schools will be increased if funds are diverted to sectarian schools out of public funds, a committee reported here to the annual meeting of the Methodist Board of Education. Bishop W. Earl Ledden, of Syracuse, N. Y., headed the committee, which urged resistance to the never-ending campaign by a powerful religious organization for complete support of sectarian schools. It said collapse of the public-school system and weakening of the foundations of national unity will result from such a campaign.

"We recognize the public schools as the primary agency through which our society attempts to open up its culture to youth and to train them in the ideals and ways of living," the report stated. "We, as Protestants, are committed to the pulic schools as the most effective means of providing common education for all our children."

Religion, the report said, should be given "its rightful place in the public-school program, without violating traditional principles of separation of church and state, by presenting moral and spiritual values."

"The intellectual and spirtual affinity existing between Protestant churches and public schools" must be recognized and a more vital relationship between the two urged.

Mr. President, the other article in The Churchman, being the one advocating the use of financial aid from both Federal and State sources for private and parochial schools, reads as follows:

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—Federal and State financial aid for private or parochial schools to give equal opportunity to all and special privileges to none was recommended here by Dr. Henry VanZyl, professor of education at Calvin College, in an address before members of the Michigan Christian School Alliance.

"If we want to have a healthy social structure and preserve our democracy, and if private schools are among the best guaranties of liberty and freedom, then we ought to give private schools and private initiative more support," Dr. VanZyl asserted.

Parochial schools of all faiths are as entitled to governmental assistance as are public schools, under the American theory of justice to all and prejudice toward none, in Dr. VanZyl's opinion.

He sees no threat in private-school aid to the American principle of separation of church and state. "Government financial support to all schools, public and private, would be more in keeping with the spirit of democracy upon which this country was founded."

Mr. President, the Council of Bishops of the Methodist Church, as reported in The Churchman of May 15, 1947, has this to say:

We rejoice in the liberty this Nation grants churches to maintain schools if they so desire, but we hold that the support from public funds of sectarian education is fraught with danger and must be resisted and ended.

Mr. President, over a year ago there occurred in my own city of St. Louis, Mo., a notable convention of the Southern Baptist Church, attended by 7,900 persons from 19 States and the District of Columbia. The Christian Science Monitor of May 9, 1947, contains a statement, a portion of which I shall read. It is entitled "Baptists Against the United States Aid to Church Institutions" and it reads as follows:

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 9.—The Southern Baptist Convention, protesting what it described as a threat to the future of all public schools, went on record today against the acceptance of Federal aid by church-sponsored schools. The convention, attended by 7,900 persons from 19 States and the District of Columbia, adopted unanimously a resolution warning all Baptist schools and other institutions against accepting grants of money from the Government for any purpose, on the ground it weakened what it termed the traditional wall between the church and State.

Mr. President, I have on my desk certain other observations, a few of which I should like to read into the RECORD. Included among them are resolutions passed by the Associated Church Press on April 22, 1949. I am informed that the Associated Church Press comprises all the better-known Protestant newspapers in America. The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas the disparity in educational opportunity across the United States works injustice to a large number of children: Be it

Resolved, That the ACP endorse in principle Federal aid to public education.

Whereas increased efforts are being made to break down the traditional American separation between church and state: Be it

Resolved, That the ACP urge Congress to amend S. 246, the Thomas bill, so as to make impossible under any circumstances the grant of Federal funds to parochial and private schools.

I also have before me an extract which I am informed is from a letter written by Dr. W. O. Carver, professor, of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS]. The letter contains this statement:

You direct my attention to the fact that the word "public" appears twice in section 6 of the bill.

I pause to say that section 6 of the bill, as I earlier observed, is the section to which my amendment proposes to add the word "public" in another place. Dr. Carver also says:

I was perfectly aware of that. I was also aware—and this was the one point of my communication—that at the third place where "public" should occur with the hyphen connecting it with "school," this vital word is omitted. It is entirely obvious that this omission was deliberate and has for its intention opening the door for the negation of the Federal Constitution. The plea of States' rights in justification of this evasion is, in my judgment, unworthy of Members of the United States Congress. My letter was for the purpose of making a plea that this evasion by omission should be corrected before the bill is passed.

I also quote the following resolution adopted on February 8, 1949, concerning Federal aid to education, by the Joint Conference Committee on Public Relations. I think I am correctly stating the name of that organization. The resolution appears in a booklet issued under the headline "Report from the Capital," Joint Conference Committee on Public Relations, 1628 Sixteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.; the Northern Baptist Convention; the Southern Baptist Convention; the National Baptist Convention; the National Baptist Convention, Inc.; J. M. Dawson, executive secretary; E. Hilton Jackson, chairman; W. B. Lipphard, secretary.

The resolution reads as follows:

The issue of the separation of church and state immediately confronts us. The bill, S. 246, now pending in Congress, lends itself to an interpretation which makes possible the use of Federal funds for parochial schools. The Joint Conference on Public Relations for the Baptists of the United States respectfully calls upon the Congress to defeat the attempt of any church group to secure public funds for parochial schools, as permitted by S. 246, section 6. We further urge that in section 6, page 7, line 10, after the words "expenditure for", the words "tax-supported public" be inserted.

Mr. President, a letter dated April 14, 1949, upon the letterhead of the American Council of Christian Churches of California, Civil Affairs Committee, after stating the date, reads as follows:

The Honorable FORREST C. DONNELL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We view with deep concern some of the trends which we see in our Nation today. There are some programs which at the outset may seem desirable, but if not carefully guarded, may prepare the way for the overthrow of the very thing that they are designed to promote. We fear that this is true with many of the Federal-aid-to-education bills. Almost all these bills that have come to our attention would allow the Federal aid moneys to be used for any educational purpose that is approved by the particular State. (Mrs. DOUGLAS' bill is a notable and praiseworthy exception.) At present there are at least 19 States in which State school funds are being used in one way or another to benefit private or parochial schools. Of course, we do not refer to the private specialized schools for the mentally or physically handicapped which educational authorities have found to be very helpful, but we do refer to such practices as school-bus transportation furnished to parochial school students, textbooks furnished to parochial school students, and other so-called indirect aid. All State constitutions forbid the use of tax funds for the benefit of any other than public schools, but by curious interpretations these constitutions have been made to allow the very action which they prohibit. With these incidental benefit and general welfare decisions we must disagree most strongly.

Right here may we say that in considering these decisions it is not our desire to single out any particular group, but rather that we are opposed in principle to any action that tends to breach the wall between church and state. Though I am a Baptist, I am as thoroughly opposed to any State aid that might come to Baptists as to any other religious denomination. We believe that the giving of any tax funds to aid directly or indirectly any church organization is wrong both legally and morally. We believe that any aid which assists any private or parochial school system in obtaining pupils, or lightens the financial burden of maintaining their pupils, is aid to that school system. And when a school system is operated by a church for the purpose of instructing in its dogmas and rituals, then aid to that school system is aid to that church and comes perilously close to establishment of that church. The history of education in many other lands reveals the consummate folly of entrusting one church with the authority for and responsibility of educating our children.

Now, we realize that this may seem quite far-fetched and suspicious on our part, but we feel that the loopholes in many of these bills may be used to establish practices which are and must remain foreign to our Nation. We cannot afford to risk wrecking the best educational system in the world—our public schools. Therefore we ask you to insist that any educational aid bill which Congress may consider be endowed with such safeguards as will prevent the aid going to any but public schools.

Very truly yours,

G. M. LANE,
Chairman.

Mr. President, I have also at hand a release of the Religious News Service, 331 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y., under date of May 2, 1949, which was Monday of this week. It reads:

METHODIST LEADERS WARNED AGAINST FEDERAL AID

(By Religious News Service)

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.—

Unless some Senator wants it all read, I shall not undertake to do so, because some of it does not pertain to the question now being discussed. I shall read what I think applies. The entire communication is available if any Senator wishes to see it. It reads as follows:

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.—Schools founded and fostered by church groups will make larger contributions to society if they do not receive governmental support, Dr. John C. Gross, head of the Methodist Church's division of educational institutions, declared here.

Dr. Gross addressed a meeting of the Methodist Board of Education, which comprises 109 ministers and laymen of the church. The division of educational institutions connects 127 Methodist-related universities, colleges, and schools, with a combined enrollment of 181,027 students, including 81,804 veterans.

Urging that church schools be kept independent and free, Dr. Gross said:

"The Methodist Church should not abandon its educational institutions upon the doorstep of the United States Treasury."

He warned that if a financial crisis developed which would make church schools dependent upon the Federal Government for support, "they will find it difficult to avoid governmental dictation and ultimate State domination."

Mr. President, I have also a letter, on the letterhead of the Council of Churches, St. Joseph Protestantism United for Service, Y. W. C. A. Building, St. Joseph, Mo., February 2, 1949, which I shall read into the RECORD:

The Honorable FORREST DONNELL,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DONNELL: I am writing to express my concern over the Senate bill No. 246 dealing with the matter of Federal aid to public education.

I realize the predicament in which public education finds itself in these days and sincerely hope that some method can be worked out which will undergird our educational system adequately. I think it is high time that this matter be considered thoroughly by the Senate body. My concern, Mr. DONNELL, is over the provision in the bill which throws the responsibility upon each State for the allocation of this Federal money between public and parochial schools. I think this is a proposed violation of the principle of separation of church and state and will open the doors of the Public Treasury to sectarian inroads.

I know many Protestant Christians will appreciate whatever effort you can put forth to undergird our public education without at the same time placing public money at the disposal of a system which is opposite to public education.

Very sincerely yours,

GEORGE H. WILSON,
Executive Secretary.

I referred earlier this afternoon to the article in the Christian Century of March 23, 1949. I think it is appropriate at this point to read a few of the sentences near the end of that article, and I do so, as follows:

So far as is known, S. 246 has not yet come from the subcommittee.

I pause, Mr. President, to say that is the bill which subsequently did come from the committee and is now being debated.

I resume the quotation:

There is, therefore, time for public opinion to express itself. Every Senator should be made aware that the weasel omission of this critical word, which puts the Federal Government in the position of gratuitously offering to subsidize parochial schools, is resented by patriotic citizens who are determined that the separation of church and state shall be maintained. The opinion of citizens should be registered by letter to their own Senators, strongly urging that, prior to voting on S. 246, this one word "public" should be inserted in line 10 of section 6 before the words, "elementary or secondary school purposes."

I may say, that obviously the print of the bill before the writer of this editorial was an earlier print, but it is the same line, as I understand, to which my amendment applies; and the amendment which I now propose is to insert the word "public" at the point indicated by the writer of the article.

Mr. President, what does this bill propose to do with respect to the use of Federal funds by either sectarian or private schools? Obviously, it does not contain any express prohibition against the use of the funds by either sectarian or private schools. We can search the bill from one end to the other and not find one single syllable of any prohibition of or opposition to the use of Federal funds by either sectarian or private schools, unless the language which is contained in section 6, "for which educational revenues derived from State or local sources may legally and constitutionally be expended in such State" constitutes such expression of prohibition.

I shall discuss that language a little later.

What does the bill do? Let us examine it and see what it does; that is to say, section 6, which is the one under discussion. Instead of saying specifically the purposes for which Federal funds may be used; instead of using, as the bill elsewhere does in 31 places, the word "public"; instead of stating, as the title of the bill does, that it is "To authorize the appropriation of funds * * * in financing a minimum foundation education program of public elementary and secondary schools"; instead of stating as among the objects of the bill "reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools", section 6 reads:

In order more nearly to equalize educational opportunities, the funds paid to a State from the funds appropriated under section 3 of this act shall be available for disbursement by the State educational authority, either directly or through payments to local public-school jurisdictions—

Note the word "public" there—

or other State public-education agencies—

Note the word "public" there—for any current expenditure—

Note the omission of the word "public" at that point—

for elementary or secondary school purposes for which educational revenues derived from State or local sources may legally and constitutionally be expended in such State.

Mr. President, I take it that the language "purposes for which educational revenue is derived from State or local sources may legally be expended in such State" is merely a legal conclusion and can lead to nothing else than extensive litigation from one end of the country to the other to determine what school purposes are there for which educational revenues derived from State or local sources may legally and constitutionally be expended in such State. Of course, a final decision of the Supreme Court of the United States ultimately would be rendered and would set the question at rest, but this bill, by the use of such language as I have indicated, which I think any lawyer will state unhesitatingly constitutes a mere legal conclusion, does not set at rest the purposes for which these moneys may be used.

We were told last year by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, who argues today very clearly and vigorously in favor of the bill, of his opinion as to certain decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I quote from what he said on March 24, 1948, at page 3357 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

I might say that, so far as the parochial schools are concerned, the recent decisions of the Supreme Court make it—almost impossible for any State to give aid to any parochial schools except possibly for bus transportation.

I admire the frank statement of the Senator from Ohio. It will be observed that he did not make that statement without qualification. The word "almost" is a very significant qualification of the language of the Senator from Ohio. The cases to which he referred were obviously the two cases the opinions in which he asked to be incorporated and which were incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at page 3357 and following, namely, the cases of Everson, appellant, against Board of Education, previously mentioned in my argument this afternoon, and the other, the case of the State of Illinois ex rel. McCollum, which latter decision was delivered on March 8, 1948, the Everson decision having been delivered on February 10, 1947.

Mr. President, to my mind neither of these two decisions, or, so far as I know, no other decision of which I have heard, is decisive on the question involved here as to what purposes there are for which these funds may legally and constitutionally be expended in the respective States. I concede that there is certain language in each of them from which a strong argument may be made that none of these funds could be used for parochial schools; and I should not be at all surprised if the Supreme Court ultimately shall so hold. But, Mr. President, we have a situation today in which the Court has gone only as far as the Everson case and the McCollum case go, unless there are some other decisions later of which I am not advised; and neither of those decisions, notwithstanding the observations to which I refer, is decisive of the issue here at hand.

I say I concede the fact that certain of the language in each of these cases can be used very effectively in support of an argument, and possibly, and I might even say probably, a subsequent Court decision to the effect that no State can contribute to sectarian schools except possibly by way of a contribution to a pupil, or to his parents, for his transportation. For example, in the Everson case Mr. Justice Black said, at page 16 of his opinion, in speaking of the New Jersey situation:

The State contributes no money to the schools. It does not support them. This legislation as applied does no more than to provide a general program to help parents get their children, regardless of their religion, safely and expeditiously to and from accredited schools.

Also at page 14 of this opinion Mr. Justice Black, in the same case, said:

New Jersey cannot consistently with the establishment of religion clause of the first amendment contribute tax-raised funds to the support of an institution which teaches the tenets and faith of any church.

I shall a little later come to the McCollum case, and possibly cite certain language in it to which an advocate arguing to the effect that these funds cannot be used for sectarian schools might point in aid of his argument.

Mr. President, notwithstanding the language which I have read, in the Everson case the Court did not adjudicate the question whether such aid, other than transportation, could be given to sectarian schools. This follows from the fact that the question whether such other aid can be given such schools was not before the Court in the Everson case. The only question before the Court was whether parents who had paid bus fares for their children were legally and constitutionally entitled to reimbursement for those fares. That was the question before the Court, that was the only question decided by the Court, and anything not necessary to that decision was dictum by the Court, and not binding upon it. Any lawyer in this great body would join with me in the statement, I am sure, that the Court is not only not bound by dictum, but in many cases repudiates dicta.

I point out that although the only question in the Everson case was whether, if a parent shall pay transportation for his child to go to school, he can legally be reimbursed for it, Justice Rutledge and his adherents upon the Court had this significant observation to make as to the broad language of the Court in that case:

Neither so high nor so impregnable today as yesterday is the wall raised between church and state by Virginia's great statute of religious freedom in the first amendment, now made applicable to all the States by the fourteenth.

It is entirely conceivable that hereafter some type of aid or some aid under specific circumstances to sectarian schools, which aid the minority represented by Mr. Justice Rutledge would consider a further breach of the wall between church and state, may not be considered by the majority to be such breach at all. Indeed, apprehension to that effect is indicated in the Everson case by the four minority justices when, after the quotation which I gave but a moment ago, they said:

That a third, and a fourth, and still others will be attempted, we may be sure. For just as Cochran v. Board of Education (281 U. S., 370) has opened the way by oblique ruling for this decision, so will the two make wider the breach for a third. Thus with time the most solid freedom steadily gives away before continuing corrosive decision.

Let me recall that the Cochran case was one in which it was held that the furnishing of books to the school children, both in public and private schools, or wholly either sectarian or nonsectarian, from public funds in Louisiana, did not follow the Fourteenth Amendment as a taking of private property for a private purpose. It was held also by the Court that the taxing power of the State was there exerted for a public purpose.

Even the observations in the Everson case which may hereafter be used effectively in either an argument or a subsequent court decision, that no State can give aid to sectarian schools except possibly by way of contribution to a pupil or his parents, may not be applicable to a future method of operation by a sectarian school. For example, such a school may hereafter be so operated as not to embrace those religious activities to which Justice Black alluded, or to teach the tenets or faith of any church, to quote substantially if not exactly his language. The activities of the school could be rearranged so as to embrace the teaching of ordinary school work in one building, thereupon adjourning the pupils to other nearby quarters for religious instruction after the hours for sectarian school, so that by some such arrangement the activities of the school could be arranged so as not to teach the tenets or faith of any church.

The primary point which I make as to the Everson case is that the question as to whether or not public funds from the Federal Government may be used for sectarian schools was not the question at issue, and that consequently the case itself does not justify the conclusion that the law is settled by the decision of the Court.

Mr. President, I am not alone in the view, as I judge from a certain incident which occurred on May 2, 1947, that the Everson case is not decisive to the effect that the use of public funds for sectarian purposes is barred. I call attention to the fact that the Everson case was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States on the 10th day of February 1947. On May 2, 1947, after widespread public discussion of the Everson case in newspapers and by word of mouth all over the United States, a significant thing occurred in the House of Representatives. Not only was the decision not accepted in the House as conclusive to the effect that Federal funds could not be used for sectarian schools, but to the contrary Representative JOSEPH R. BRYSON, of South Carolina, whom many of my colleagues doubtless know, introduced in the House of Representatives on May 2, 1947, a joint resolution proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States specifically prohibiting the use of public funds for sectarian purposes. If it had been decided in the Everson case, and if it was certain, that nothing else of a substantial nature could ever be turned over to sectarian schools because of the Everson case decision, obviously the amendment which Mr. BRYSON proposed would be unnecessary and superfluous.

The Christian Science Monitor of May 3, 1947 contained an article headed as follows: "Constitutional amendment would bar public funds for sectarian purposes."

I read from the article as follows:

WASHINGTON.—A proposed amendment to the United States Constitution, implementing its original intent of separation between the church and state by specifically prohibiting the use of public funds for sectarian purposes, was introduced in Congress May 2 by Representative JOSEPH R. BRYSON, Democrat, of South Carolina.

Speaking from the floor of the House of Representatives, Mr. BRYSON explained that it was "not directed at or against any particula faith or creed, but applies to all faiths and all creeds alike as was the original intention of the first amendment."

Mr. BRYSON continued: "Due to increasing tendencies on the part of State governments and the Federal Government to circumvent the article of the Constitution written by our founding fathers, establishing a wall of separation between church and state, it now seems necessary to give further expression—

I note that the language is not merely "advisable" but "necessary," 2⅔ months after the Everson decision—it now seems necessary to give further expression to the meaning of the constitutional barriers against the appropriation of money for and to be used by sectarian educational institutions."

Not only should separation of church and state be maintained, the Representative insisted, but "it must be more definite and distinct."

The proposed amendment reads as follows:

"Neither the National Government nor any State, county, city, town, village, nor other civil division shall use its property or credit or any money raised by taxation or otherwise, or authorize either to be used, for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding by appropriation, payment for services, expenses, or in any other manner, other than by remission of taxation, any church, religious denomination, or religious society or undertaking which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

"Neither the National Government nor any State, county, city town, village, nor other civil division shall pay any person or persons any money for services, expenses, of any kind or for any other purposes, or furnish free transportation, free textbooks, or free supplies of any kind or nature because of their connection with or attendance at, any school, institution, society, or undertaking, which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

"Nothing herein contained shall in any way repeal or curtail the privileges, rights, and benefits of persons who served in the armed forces of the United States of America as set forth in House Document No. 772, of the Seventy-ninth Congress, second session."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire article from the Christian Science Monitor, from which I have quoted, may be incorporated in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT WOULD BAR PUBLIC FUNDS FOR SECTARIAN PURPOSES

WASHINGTON.—A proposed amendment to the United States Constitution, implementing its original intent of separation between the church and state by specifically prohibiting the use of public funds for sectarian purposes, was introduced in Congress May 2 by Representative JOSEPH R. BRYSON, Democrat, of South Carolina.

Speaking from the floor of the House of Representatives, Mr. BRYSON explained that it was "not directed at or against any particular faith or creed, but applies to all faiths and all creeds alike as was the original intention of the first amendment."

TENDENCY TO SIDESTEP

Mr. BRYSON continued: "Due to increasing tendencies on the part of State governments and the Federal Government to circumvent the article of the Constitution written by our founding fathers, establishing a wall of separation between church and state, it now seems necessary to give further expression to the meaning of the constitutional barriers against the appropriation of money for and to be used by sectarian educational institutions."

Not only should separation of church and state be maintained, the Representative insisted, but "it must be more definite and distinct."

The proposed amendment reads as follows:

"Neither the National Government nor any State, county, city, town, village, nor other civil division shall use its property or credit or any money raised by taxation or otherwise, or authorize either to be used, for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding by appropriation, payment for services, expenses, or in any other manner, other than by remission of taxation, any church, religious denomination, or religious society or undertaking which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

"Neither the National Government nor any State, county, city, town, village, nor other civil division shall pay any person or persons any money for services, expenses, of any kind or for any other purposes, or furnish free transportation, free textbooks, or free supplies of any kind or nature because of their connection with or attendance at, any school, institution, society, or undertaking, which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

"Nothing herein contained shall in any way repeal or curtail the privileges, rights, and benefits of persons who served in the armed forces of the United States of America as set forth in House Document No. 772, of the Seventy-ninth Congress, second session."

SPURS CIVIC DRIVES

Primed by the recent United States Supreme Court's 5-to-4 decision upholding the right of the State of New Jersey to pay for the transportation of parochial school children, Mr. BRYSON's action spearheads a national movement by civic and church groups to clarify the democratic intent of the highest laws of the land.

Aroused organizations all over the country, who see in the Court's action an opening wedge for broader demands by sectarian groups, are tendering their support to the National League Opposed to Sectarian Appropriation at its headquarters in Cambridge, Mass., according to Frank J. Batcheller, chairman.

NAME IS CHANGED

Founded in 1903 as the American Minute Men, the organization recently adopted the more specific title of National League Opposed to Sectarian Appropriations.

Under that title the league claims to have gathered a membership of many millions who believe, "since it is the irrefutable intention of the Nation's bylaws to keep the church and state separate, that this intention should be projected into the Constitution in clear and irrefutable language," according to Mr. Batcheller.

Instead of discouraging the league, the Supreme Court's ruling merely has confirmed the original conviction of its members that the Constitution is too open to legal interpretations on the vital issue of the separation of church and state, Mr. Batcheller explained. Hence, he said, the time has now come to act.

The wide division of opinion in the highest court of the land on so vital an issue as "separation of church and state," the league spokesman warned, "indicates an entering wedge that might well cause one to wonder as to where it will stop."

MUCH BIGGER ISSUE

"The issue is much bigger than that of paying from public funds for the costs of transporting school children," Mr. Batcheller continued. "It implies the ultimate breakdown of one of the main bulwarks of democracy, namely, religious liberty, or the freedom from domination of the church by the state, or domination of the state by the church.

"That courts, legislatures, and conferences can show wide divergencies of opinion over the separation of church and state implies the dangers of legal ambiguities.

"The minority report of two of the Justices of the highest court in the land on the New Jersey issue attest to these dangers. For there is no plainly drawn provision in the Constitution upon which the Court could act positively in preserving the separation of church and state."

TEXT OF AMENDMENT

As introduced by Mr. BRYSON, the amendment specifically stated that "Neither the National Government nor any State, county, city, town, village, nor other civil division shall use its property or credit or any money raised by taxation or otherwise, or authorized either to be used, for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding by appropriation, payment for services, expenses, or in any other manner, other than by remission of taxation, any church, religious denomination, or religious society, or any institution, school, society, or undertaking which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control."

VET AID EXEMPTED

The proposed amendment continued: "Neither the National Government nor any State, county, city, town, village, nor any civil division shall pay any person or persons any money for services, expenses of any kind or for any other purpose, or furnish them free transportation, free textbooks, or free supplies of any kind or nature because of their connection with, or attendance at, any school, institution, society, or undertaking, which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control. Nothing herein contained shall in any way repeal or curtail the privileges, rights, or benefits of persons who served in the armed forces of the United States of America as set forth in House Document No. 772 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, second session."

Clarifying the final sentence of the amendment that would appear to permit appropriations to sectarian colleges and schools, Mr. Batcheller stated: "Congress has passed certain emergency legislation providing for the education of veterans, with which we do not intend to interfere."

As a matter of fact, Mr. Batcheller explained, omission of the last sentence would have had little effect, if any, upon the funds appropriated for veterans' education since passage of the amendment, he said, will require several years, when most war veterans will have completed their educational benefits under existing appropriations.

Mr. Batcheller made it plain that the League Opposed to Sectarian Appropriations was neither anti-Roman Catholic, antisectarian, nor antianything. Rather, it is a pro-American organization, he said, of churchmen and representatives of civic groups throughout the country who believe "that the best way to handle this problem of taxpayers' money being used for the support of nonpublic schools and institutions is by the adoption of a constitutional amendment."

POPULAR TEST SOUGHT

The present legal rifts that permit the legal interpretation of this vital issue already have resulted in the use of public funds for the transportation of parochial school children in 14 States.

Yet, in only two instances, he pointed out, has the question been referred to popular vote—"once in New York, when the issue was lumped into an omnibus bill covering 24 other issues, and again in Wisconsin where appropriations for sectarian support were defeated by more than 100,000 votes.

"This issue has been strongly political," Mr. Batcheller stated. "In the 14 States mentioned, appropriations for parochial school transportation have been granted by the legislatures. The proposal even got through two sessions of the Wisconsin Legislature before it was slaughtered by a popular referendum.

"Hence, the attempt is being made to keep this issue in the legislatures and away from the voters. Yet I would predict that 75 to 80 percent of the people would vote against it if they had the opportunity."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a further indication that it will likely be contended that the Everson case does not settle the right of the Federal Government to extend aid to sectarian schools is found in a very interesting and very instructive article by Prof. J. M. O'Neill, chairman of the speech department at Brooklyn College and chairman of the Committee on Academic Freedom of the American Civil Liberties Union, in the June 1947 issue of the magazine called Commentary, in which article, although Professor O'Neill refers to and shows familiarity with the Everson case, he includes as the chief of what he considers two principal arguments for extending Federal aid to parochial schools, that which he terms the untenable position that the United States Constitution forbade such aid. The McCollum case likewise is not in point. It merely holds that in the tax-supported public schools in the State of Illinois religious instruction cannot be given. In this connection I call attention to the fact that the school district was using the compulsory process of its public-school system to provide religious classes for its pupils.

Mr. President, I submit that the effect of the bill is not conclusively determined by either the Everson or the McCollum cases.

We are told by the Senator from Ohio today that the amendment is in conflict with the theory of the bill. I submit that it is not. The very title of the bill, the very use of the word "public," the very reference to the program of "public elementary and secondary schools," and "the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools," indicate that a provision that these expenditures may only be made for public elementary or secondary school purposes is in line with the purposes of the bill. He says that this is a limitation upon the States. Mr. President, the very fact that the bill gives money only to educational purposes is in itself a limitation. It is not a gift for any purpose that the State may desire to use the money.

So, Mr. President, the amendment which I propose is in line with the purposes of the bill, is in line with sound public policy, and the amendment should be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KNOWLAND in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

By order of the Senate, the following announcement is made after each quorum call:

The members of the Committee on Foreign Relations have been granted permission to be absent from the sessions of the Senate while the Committee on Foreign Relations was conducting hearings on the North Atlantic Pact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL].

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to make a very brief observation on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri and ask one question. The observation is this:

While I find myself in sympathy with the purposes of this amendment, there is in the State of Vermont the situation of private academies which serve as high schools. They are nonsectarian. They are supported in considerable measure by endowments and private contributions, but they are also supported in large measure by the payment of tuition by the townships from which the students come, which townships have no high schools of their own.

As I read this amendment, it would not permit the use of Federal funds for institutions of that sort. If that is the case, I find I cannot support it. That is my observation.

Now I wish to ask a question. I assume that in some way the application of public funds to sectarian schools is based upon the Supreme Court decision in the New Jersey case. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, who is versed in the law, as I am not, whether that decision in any way limits the application of public funds to sectarian schools or whether it says that only funds for purposes of transportation can be so directed, or whether it permits in full the direction of the funds under this bill to any purposes for which the bill permits the application of the funds.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Vermont asked the question and made the observation. Early this afternoon, in the course of the discussion, I mentioned the fact that the reason why I changed the amendment from the form in which I presented it last year to the form in which I presented it this year was to take care of the very situation which exists in the State of Vermont. The Senator from Vermont, who now asks the question, doubtless recalls that he asked me a question earlier and left the floor shortly thereafter and did not hear my observation.

It was pointed out last year in connection with the amendment which I then presented, which contained an express provision that no funds appropriated under the act should be disbursed in any State for the support or benefit of any sectarian or private school, that in the opinion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] that amendment would have prevented the payment of any funds to those academies in Vermont.

I have come to the conclusion that the Senator from Vermont was correct in his view, because obviously these academies are private schools—I do not know whether they are sectarian, but certainly they are private—and therefore the prohibition which I had placed in my amendment in that form would have prevented the funds from being applied to private schools.

But last year the Senator from Vermont pointed out that—

> Thousands of boys and girls have received a high-school education by attending these technically private but actually public schools.

To my mind and in my judgment—and I state it as the purpose of this amendment, in order that we may have a legislative record of the congressional intent—if money shall be paid to a State, let us say to the State of Vermont, and if, instead of having its own high schools in separate school buildings in each of the towns, it desires to engage the services or facilities, or both, of one of these academies, that is a public-school purpose of the State or municipality or school district, as the case may be; and therefore there is nothing in my amendment, as I construe it, which would prevent the State of Vermont, in the case I have mentioned, from using any or all, if it so desired, of the funds which would go to it, for the purpose of making payments to these academies. The only purpose I had in changing the form of the amendment was to cover that specific situation.

Mr. President, the Everson case, which arose in New Jersey, I discussed quite fully this afternoon, but I shall be pleased to attempt to restate very briefly my views regarding it.

The Everson case decides only one thing, namely, that if a parent pays money for the bus transportation of his child to and from school, a statute which authorizes the board of education to reimburse the parent for those expenditures does not violate the Constitution of the United States. The Everson case does not decide the question of whether it is possible for a State or for the Federal Government, or for both, to contribute moneys to a sectarian school.

I pointed out that in the Everson case there are strong observations which I regard as entirely dicta, as I construe the case, and therefore not binding on the Court, but nevertheless strong statements which I think can and will be availed of by counsel at the appropriate time in the Supreme Court in arguing that the State does not have any power to use public funds for sectarian schools. However, even though those dicta are in the case, the decision of the case itself was not based on them. The decision of the case was based solely on the facts which I have mentioned, namely, the payment by the parent of money for the transportation of his child, and the reimbursement of the parent by the board of education.

Mr. President, I believe that this bill is vague and uncertain when it declares in section 6 that the moneys to be appropriated may be used "for any current expenditure for elementary or secondary school purposes for which educational revenues derived from State or local sources may legally and constitutionally be expended in such State."

So, I say that the law is not determined by the Everson case. I should not be at all surprised—indeed, I think it quite probable—that ultimately the Supreme Court will hold that public funds cannot be used for sectarian schools. But that has not been held in the Everson case. The observations in that case to which I have referred, and which I have quoted earlier in my argument, are dicta entirely.

If the Senator will permit me to do so, I shall say that the McCollum case, which came up from Illinois—and which was the second of the two cases relied upon last year by the Senator from Ohio as almost, although not entirely, making it impossible for public funds to be used for private or parochial schools, except for bus transportation—is likewise not decisive of the matter now under consideration. The McCollum case decided the sole point that where a school district uses the compulsory power of the State to bring the students to the public schools, public moneys cannot be used in the public schools for the teaching of sectarian classes.

The Court says this:

> Here not only are the State's tax-supported public-school buildings used for the dissemination of religious doctrines. The State also affords sectarian groups an invaluable aid in that it helps to provide pupils for their religious classes through use of the State's compulsory public-school machinery. This is not separation of church and State.

Likewise, in the McCollum case there are dicta upon which counsel may make strong arguments to the Court in the future that tax funds cannot be used for sectarian schools—as, for illustration, this language—

> This is beyond all question a utilization of the tax-established and tax-supported public-school system to aid religious groups to spread their faith.

And particularly this:

> Neither a State nor the Federal Government can, openly or secretly, participate in the affairs of any religious organizations or groups, and vice versa.

Notwithstanding the dicta which I have read, and which I have tried to state fairly from these decisions, and which ultimately may be used and may be cited by the Court as its observations, I point out that they are dicta solely, and are not decisive or binding on the question of whether public funds can be used in sectarian schools.

Mr. President, I wish to conclude my remarks by this brief statement: It was said today upon the floor of the Senate by my friend the distinguished Senator from Ohio that not only the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut but my amendment conflict with the theory of this bill. I do not undertake to discuss the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut; but I say that my amendment not only does not conflict with the theory of the bill, but is in furtherance of it and carries it into effect.

Earlier today, I pointed out, at a time when only a few Senators were on the floor of the Senate, that the title of this bill is "To authorize the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in financing a minimum foundation education program of public"—I emphasize the word "public"; and then—"elementary and secondary schools, and in reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools, for the general welfare, and for other purposes."

Earlier today I also pointed out—I repeat it now only because there are many more Senators in the Chamber at this time than there were then—that in this bill the term "public" appears 31 times, in connection with other words which I cited—for instance, in such expressions as "public education," "public educational agency," "public school jurisdiction," and the like; but that when we get down to section 6, although it itself uses the term "public" twice, yet when it reaches the clause which tells us what current expenditure disbursements can be made from these funds, it omits the word "public."

Mr. President, it appears that the Reporter has doubtless taken for his own use, properly I am sure, the copy of the Christian Century from which I quoted. But I did quote several observations from that paper, a recent issue of March, this year, to the general effect that the omission of the word "public" totally changes the whole significance of the bill as set forth in its other sections. The insertion of the word "public," making the expenditures limited to public elementary and public secondary-school purposes, is not, as the Senator from Ohio says, in conflict with the bill. He tells us that it is in conflict, because it would undertake to interfere with the right of the State to determine for what the funds may be used. On the basis of that argument, the very fact that the moneys are limited to educational purposes would in itself violate what he considers the theory of the bill. I take it the Federal Government does not in the bill undertake to give carte blanche to the State to use the money for anything it desires. It must use it, not for travel, not for medicine, not for something else, but for educational purposes.

To my mind, when the bill is titled as it is, referring to a program of public schools, referring to a program of public elementary and secondary schools, and when throughout the bill 31 times the term "public" is used, for the Senate to omit the word "public" when it comes to the heart of the bill is violative of the terms of the bill, and of the theory of the bill, but to insert the word "public" is not in conflict with the theory of the bill; it is in consonance with it.

Mr. President, I earnestly insist that from the standpoint of public policy, from the standpoint of the interest of the Nation itself, from the standpoint of the sectarian schools themselves, which do not want and which should not want governmental interference of any kind, the amendment, which confines the use of the funds to public schools, should be adopted. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL]. On the amendment the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1949

During the delivery of Mr. DONNELL's speech,

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to make a unanimous-consent request. I think it will take only a moment or two. Will the Senator from Missouri yield for that purpose?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield, Mr. President, if it may be understood by unanimous consent that I do not lose my position on the floor, and that also what is said by the Senator from Tennessee and what is done by the Senate itself shall follow my remarks. I shall be glad to give my consent, with those provisos attached to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement concerning the first deficiency bill in connection with our conference with the House on that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we have had a conference with the House for 2 or 3 weeks on the first deficiency bill. The two items mostly contested were what is known as the White House repair item, and the reclamation item. A number of meetings have been held, the last one being for approximately 2 hours. We agreed on substantially everything except the reclamation proposal. The usual procedure is to report a disagreement back to the two Houses, but the House conferees refused to report the matter. Therefore we are in the position of not only not agreeing in conference, but in the position of not receiving a report of disagreement, so that the two Houses may pass upon the subject in the usual and customary manner. Under those circumstances, in order that the many employees of the Government, from the President on down, who are without their pay and who will probably have to borrow money in order to get along—it has been claimed that that is the situation which some—the House passed, on April 14, a joint resolution making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1949. It is what is usually termed a continuing resolution. I am asking unanimous consent that that resolution be considered at this time and that it be agreed to. I think the clerk should read it for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 226) as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there are hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and out of applicable corporate or other revenue, receipts, and funds, such amounts as may be necessary to permit Government departments, agencies, and corporations for which appropriations or other funds would be made available by the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1949 (H. R. 2632), as passed by the House of Representatives on February 16, 1949, or as passed by the Senate on April 13, 1949, to carry out their functions, until the approval of said act, at the rate which would be provided for in appropriations, funds, or other authority granted by said act: Provided, That in any case where the amount which would be made available under said act as passed by the House of Representatives is different from the amount which would be made available under the act as passed by the Senate, the rate herein provided for shall be based on the lesser amount: Provided further, That expenditures hereunder shall be charged to the appropriate appropriation or fund contained in the aforesaid act (H. R. 2632) when it becomes law: Provided further, That no funds appropriated pursuant to this paragraph shall be used for salaries and expenses of a person in any of the following positions in the Bureau of Reclamation, or of any person who performs the duties of any such position, who is not a qualified engineer with at least 5 years' engineering and administrative experience: (1) Commissioner of Reclamation; (2) Assistant Commissioner of Reclamation; and (3) Regional Director of Reclamation.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee that the members of the Appropriations Committee on this side of the aisle are in complete sympathy with attempting to resolve the situation. I know the Senator realizes that we have given our full cooperation.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely true.

Mr. WHERRY. What the Senator has said, of course, is correct. The resolution was passed by the House prior to their recess over the Easter holidays. Is that correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, without going into details, what the resolution really does is to preserve the status quo, if I may use that expression, of the so-called Straus situation, and in passing the joint resolution we are not changing at all the provisions of the appropriation bill and the Senate's language in the bill remains in full force and effect.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct. The purpose of the joint resolution is to pay the employees of certain departments, bureaus, and organizations in the Government from the President on down.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. If the only issue is the question of the status of Mr. Straus, and the same thing is done in the continuing resolution which has been done in the bill, for the life of me, I cannot understand why there is any need for the joint resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am frank to say that I cannot answer that question. The reason why it is being done is because the House conferees declined to take the matter back to the House for a vote, which is what should be done in the ordinary, everyday procedure, as we know.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] is the ranking member on the conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, and he has cooperated in every way.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have him make an observation. I did not want to have this joint resolution taken up until he was present, and he is now in the Chamber. I think what we would like to protect is the situation with reference to the Commissioner of Reclamation, and if the status quo is maintained, that is agreeable to me. I certainly hope the Senator from South Dakota will express himself.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator from South Dakota speaks, let me say that the law as it is will remain the same. The joint resolution merely tides over the payment of Government employees. The pay of many thousands of employees should not be held up because two are in controversy. We hope to have the whole controversy settled in the second deficiency bill. I am quite sure it can be done.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask whether it is not the opinion of the Senator from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee that the only intention of the joint resolution is as expressed in the report which went to the House when the House passed it, in which it was stated categorically that the reason for passing it was to pay the salaries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, that is my understanding.

Mr. GURNEY. Does not the Senator agree with me that where there is a change in language as between the House version and the Senate version, for instance in the force account provisions of a bureau of the Department of the Interior, the continuing resolution does not change the basic law?

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not change it at all.

Mr. GURNEY. Because the two Houses have not agreed how the exact change should be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. GURNEY. It is the Senator's interpretation, then, is it not, that the resolution does preserve the status quo on the force account provisions?

Mr. McKELLAR. It does, in my judgment, and practically the only effect of the joint resolution is to provide for paying the Government's obligations for work which has already been done to the many employees who have done the work.

Mr. GURNEY. I may say that is my interpretation, and I am glad the Senator from Tennessee agrees with me.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Reserving the right to object, in order that I may ask a question or two, on page 1 of the continuing joint resolution, beginning in line 6, is the language, "necessary to permit Government departments, agencies, and corporations for which appropriations or other funds would be made available by the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1949, (H. R. 2632)." That is the bill which is in conference, and the one, as I understand, on which the House will not even report a disagreement.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. It might almost be said, in effect, that they have walked out of the conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would not say that, but they decline to take it back to the House for further instructions.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is what I mean. It is the bill "as passed by the House of Representatives on February 16, 1949, or as passed by the Senate on April 13, 1949"—that is the bill the Senate passed——

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. "To carry out their functions, until the approval of said act, at the rate which would be provided for in appropriation, funds"—this is the language to which I wish to call attention—"or other authority granted by said act." Does that mean that "other authority" would cover both the Straus-Boke case and the force-account cases?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. When we go down to line 11, it is specifically provided in House Joint Resolution 226, "No funds appropriated pursuant to this paragraph"—and the words "this paragraph" would mean this act, would they not?

Mr. McKELLAR. They would.

Mr. FERGUSON. It provides, "No funds appropriated pursuant to this paragraph shall be used for salaries and expenses of a person in any of the following positions in the Bureau of Reclamation, or of any person who performs the duties," and so forth. That would mean that they would not draw any money, even as provided in the Senate bill, or any money under this appropriation?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true. As a matter of fact, that is the present law, and it is not interfered with at all. In other words, the joint resolution does not affect the two gentlemen in the Reclamation Service at all. While it does not affect them, it would permit some 15,000 or 16,000 Government employees to be paid, and in the opinion of the committee they should be paid. It seems a shame that our great Government should not pay the salaries of its employees when they are due. For that reason the Senate members of the conference unanimously agreed that the only thing to do was to take the joint resolution and have the Senate pass it in the exact words in which it was sent to the Senate from the House. It would tide over the present unfortunate situation.

Mr. FERGUSON. My reason for asking the questions is to build a legislative history. As I understand, the report in the House was very meager, and contains very little if any legislative history. That was the purpose in my asking the particular questions I have propounded.

As to the force account, is it the opinion of the able chairman of the committee that the force account would stand as in the original appropriation bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my understanding and I do not think there can be any doubt about it. I sometimes refer to to senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] as my lawyer, and I shall do so now. I ask him if it is his opinion, not as a legislator, but as a lawyer.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, not to answer that question, but to ask one?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Has it not always been the practice in the Congress, in making additional, supplemental, or deficiency appropriations, merely to appropriate the supplemental, additional, or deficiency funds, and not to repeat in the bills making such additional appropriations any of the prohibitions or qualifications which were set forth in the original or general appropriation act, and as a result of that to have the funds appropriated, as deficiency or supplemental funds, to be expendable under the terms of the original general appropriation act? Has not that been the practice?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my judgment. I think that is correct. I do not go further than to say that in my best judgment that is correct.

Mr. CORDON. Then the adoption of this joint resolution would do no more than provide funds expendable under the terms of existing law, unless the joint resolution itself expressly changed existing law?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct. I point to this example in the deficiency bill we are discussing, the first deficiency bill. On page 11 it says, "For an additional amount for 'Salaries and expenses, Office of the Housing Expediter'," so much money. That shows that the Senator is correct in the statement he has just made.

Mr. CORDON. The legal effect of the adoption of the joint resolution, then, would be that of appropriating funds for expenditure under existing law, with all the limitations, qualifications, and so forth, which such law contained?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my understanding.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. FERGUSON. Then there cannot be any doubt, so far as the legislative history of the matter in the Senate is concerned, that any official who is excepted under the second "Provided further" on line 11, page 2, anyone who comes within that prohibition, will not be entitled to his salary?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the present law.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is the present law. Nor would any such person be entitled to his salary under the joint resolution?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Would the Senator from Tennessee be good enough to answer this question for the RECORD, so as to show the attitude of the conferees on the part of the Senate respecting the deficiency bill itself and the procedure in conference? There has been no disposition on the part of the Senate conferees to hold up final action on the deficiency bill, has there?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not only has there been no disposition on the part of the Senate conferees to do so, but the Senate conferees, representing both sides of the aisle, have tried faithfully and diligently, and almost every day, to get agreement on the bill in conference.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it not also a fact that the reason the joint resolution was not acted upon before is because it was the hope of the Senate that the conferees could agree on the deficiency bill, and that it would be passed as it left the Senate, with whatever adjustments might be made in conference?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I do not want to be put in the attitude of criticizing anyone.

Mr. WHERRY. No; I do not mean that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know the Senator does not mean that. All I can say is that the Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. WHERRY. My idea in asking these questions is not to be critical. I wanted the RECORD to show, however, that the Senate itself did not act upon the House joint resolution which was passed by the House prior to the time it took its Easter recess, because the Senate hoped the conferees could agree, and that the deficiency bill would be passed. The reason for asking for action on the House joint resolution now is that the conferees have not been able to agree.

Mr. McKELLAR. They have not been able to reach a conclusion. That is the only reason for the request that the joint resolution be passed.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say that the Senate conferees have tried in every way possible to have an agreement upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 226?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 226) making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1949, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senate for its consideration.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

During the delivery of Mr. DONNELL'S speech,

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield for one more question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield on the same terms as before, that I shall not lose the floor by doing so, and that the matter will appear at the conclusion of my remarks. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that I may yield upon those terms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. How long does the Senator from Missouri believe he might speak on his amendment?

Mr. DONNELL. My present judgment is from an hour to an hour and a half.

Mr. WHERRY. In view of the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri, and also in view of the fact that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] wishes to offer an amendment, I wish to address the inquiry to the acting majority leader, as to how long he expects the Senate will remain in session this evening.

Mr. HILL. I do not believe the Senator from Colorado will occupy much of the time of the Senate in discussing his amendment. After the Senator from Missouri has completed his speech, I do not believe it will require much time to take action on his amendment. I made the announcement earlier in the day that we wanted the Senate to remain in session today until action on the bill was completed, so, in view of that announcement, I should say that an effort will be made to have final action taken on the bill this afternoon.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it the idea that the Senate will continue in session tonight?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], the acting majority leader, has just entered the Chamber, and I will ask him to reply.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], chairman of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], who is a member of the committee and who also is interested in the legislation. As the Senator from Alabama has just said, he made the announcement earlier in the day that Senators should hold themselves available, since it was the intention that final action on the bill be taken today. It is now only a quarter after five. The pending amendment and one other amendment will have to be acted upon before final action is taken on the bill. It is not anticipated there will be much debate on the amendment following that of the Senator from Missouri. The committee is hopeful that we may complete action on the bill tonight. In view of the announcement previously made, and with the hope that we can complete action on the bill, we feel we should continue for the time being.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, does that mean that it is the intention of the acting majority leader to complete action on the bill tonight?

Mr. MYERS. It is our hope that a final vote can be had on the bill tonight.

Mr. WHERRY. It is perfectly agreeable that the Senate should stay in session as long as the Senator feels it should do so, but I wonder if any firm commitment could be made relative to the hour the Senate might take a recess in the event it appears, after some further discussion has been had on it, that action cannot be completed on the bill.

Mr. MYERS. I do not know whether any such commitment can be made, in view of the announcement which was made earlier today that every effort would be made to complete action on the bill. Senators were put on notice that we might continue in session into the early evening.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I suggest to the acting majority leader and the minority leader that perhaps a unanimous-consent agreement might be reached that a vote be taken on all amendments and the final passage of the bill not later than 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Senators who have a great deal of work to attend to outside the Senate then would know what to expect, and would be able to govern themselves accordingly. I think such action would make for good legislation and at the same time would result in not tiring out Senators.

Mr. MYERS. I do not think that we on this side of the aisle would have any difficulty in agreeing to a unanimous-consent request, but I think that is a matter which should be discussed for a while before such a request is made. I think it is something which should be discussed particularly with the minority leader, because he is obliged to consult with some Members of the Senate on his side of the aisle. I believe it would be well for Senators to discuss the matter among themselves further, and in the meantime the Senator from Missouri continue his remarks on his amendment.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield, Mr. President, on the same conditions as I have heretofore yielded.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask the majority leader if it would not be more ethical to have a quorum call before a request is made for the entering into of a unanimous-consent agreement. It seems to me we should not enter into a unanimous-consent agreement when there are only about a dozen Senators on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A request for unanimous consent for fixing the time for a final vote on the passage of the bill would require a quorum call, unless that were expressly waived by the Senate.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 246) to authorize the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in financing a minimum foundation education program of public elementary and secondary schools, and in reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools, for the general welfare, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I desire to call up my amendment "C."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 11, after line 23, it is proposed to insert the following:

(4) Through its legislature shall provide that the State educational authority shall use not less than 75 percent of the funds allotted under this act to the State for the payment of salaries of teachers in the public elementary and public secondary schools.

On page 14, after line 24, insert the following:

(G) The word "teacher" means any person professionally certified in his State as eligible to teach, who is engaged in the conduct of educational work in direct relation to pupils.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, at this late hour I shall not detain the Senate more than a moment, but not because I do not have a good amendment. I think I do have a good amendment. It makes it certain that the school teachers of the Nation will benefit if the bill, with my amendment contained in it, is enacted. We all know that no school is better than are its teachers. The teachers have anticipated that if the bill is enacted it will mean better opportunities for them. That is exactly what my amendment provides.

I sincerely hope that my amendment will be adopted. I shall not ask for a yea-and-nay vote, because of the lateness of the hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. [Putting the question.]

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute, to strike out all after the enacting clause of Senate bill 246 and to substitute therefor the provisions of Senate bill 1699.

I do not care to differ at this time with any Senator in regard to the needs of public schools for additional financial aid; but I think the aid needed could be furnished by the States and local communities. I would much rather have the building program which is essential and necessary in the years ahead carried on by the local governments and the States. I am confident that it could be so carried on by them if proper attention and determination were given to the problem and to the necessity of fulfilling the need. I am likewise confident that the responsibility will not be met by local and State governments. Many of them are financially cramped at the present time and have no available tax sources at their command. The Federal Government has absorbed the tax field to such a degree that they are limited in the amount of money they can raise for this purpose. In most communities it would require a bond issue, and in many localities such a bond issue can be authorized only by a vote of the community. In some communities, with 55 to 65 percent of the people voting favorably, the responsibility is a difficult one to meet on the part of local and State governments, even though I am confident it could be met.

Mr. President, this year there are 18,600,000 children in our elementary schools. In 2 years there will be 20,000,000; in 4 years there will be 22,000,000, and in 1957 it is estimated that because of the increased birth rate during the past few years, which is continuing, there will be 26,600,000 pupils in the public schools, which will be 8,000,000 more than 18,600,000 as of today, making nearly half again as many pupils in the public schools as are attending school this year.

The bill which I propose to substitute is one authorizing $250,000,000 a year for a period of 5 years, with an authorization for a survey to be made in the States to determine the needs of the various communities. The money is to be used for the construction of school buildings alone.

There is much merit in the proposal, and I think it will meet with favorable consideration on the part of many Senators, because it will obviate the objection which has been made on the floor of the Senate many times during the debate, both by the sponsors and by the opponents of the pending measure, because it will completely prevent any Federal control over the conduct of local schools. It will maintain the integrity of State and local administration of the public-school systems.

I am one who believes that the appropriation for operating expenses of the public schools made by the Federal Government, as authorized by the bill under consideration, will mean limiting and restricting the operation and administration of the schools by the States and local communities if the money is accepted. That is the inevitable result of Federal contributions in any field of Government activity. There is no reason to think that there will be an exception in the field of Federal contribution to the administration of the public schools. Ultimately, if this program is started today, there will be appropriations running into hundreds of millions of dollars, or even billions of dollars annually, with the condition that Federal supervision shall be had ultimately over the choice of teachers, their qualifications, the curriculum which will be used in the public schools and the textbooks which will be chosen by the local authorities. That is the inevitable result of such legislation as we have been considering.

In contrast, the building program which is proposed in Senate bill 1699 would end within a period of 5 years. There would be no Federal control over the buildings or their construction, but there would be sufficient contribution by the Federal Government for the local governments to enter into the field and give to the pupils the necessary facilities with which to acquire an education, leaving the pay of the teachers and the administrative costs entirely in the hands of the governments of the States and the political subdivisions thereof.

There are many provisions of the bill which I should like to discuss. I think it is very generally understood that there is a clear distinction between administration and the construction of buildings. My bill will meet the objection which many Senators have already expressed and about which they feel very keenly. The authorization is for $30,000,000 for surveys and plans to determine the needs. It will be administered under the Commissioner of Education, in the office of the Federal Security Agency. Then there is a provision for allotments to the various States of the Union. The amount is to be determined within the rules and regulations and the limitations laid down by the Commissioner of Education.

Then there is the provision for the expenditure each year for a period of 5 years of a quarter of a billion dollars for school buildings.

There are provided general regulations which the States would have to meet, and requirements for the Federal Government to follow in the administration of the fund itself. Plans are set forth definitely within the bill to be followed by States in order to enable them to come within the provisions of the contribution authorized.

Then provision is made for the approval of the plans and payment for the projects provided for within the bill, with proper authorization to the Federal Government for the control of the character of the construction that is to be done, and minimum requirements are set forth as to the payments which shall be made.

In addition to the statement I have made, I wish to submit as a part of my remarks, to be printed in the RECORD, an editorial from the Cleveland Plain Dealer under date of April 28, which delineates the provisions of my bill, and contrasts it favorably with Senate bill 246, which is now being considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DESIRABLE ALTERNATIVE

Senator JOHN W. BRICKER, of Ohio, and Representative CLARENCE J. BROWN, of Blanchester, representing the Seventh Ohio District, have presented to Congress a sound and sane alternative to the dangerous legislative proposal that the Federal Government subsidize the everyday operation of the Nation's public schools.

Senator BRICKER and Representative BROWN, Republicans, have jointly sponsored a bill to distribute among the States on the basis of proven need, $250,000,000 a year for 5 years, to help pay for new buildings to house the growing school population and to replace unsafe and unhealthful schoolhouses.

The legislation introduced by BRICKER and BROWN should be approved by Congress in preference to the educational subsidy bill presented under the sponsorship of a bipartisan group of 15 Senators, including the senior Senator from Ohio, ROBERT A. TAFT, who is also a Republican.

The Bricker-Brown proposal is highly preferable to the educational subsidy bill. That bill would allocate to the several States for redistribution to local school systems for operating expenses, $300,000,000 a year for probably as long as the Government remained solvent—and allocate it under a formula that would give greatest benefit to States which have provided weak local and State support for their schools.

The Bricker-Brown bill provides a terminal point for the proposed Federal grant of $250,000,000 a year. But more importantly, the Federal money would be used only for school building construction purposes, and would not allow Federal control, along with Federal dollars, to extend into the classrooms of the public schools of the United States.

If Congress appropriated $250,000,000 for the construction of school buildings, local school districts would be relieved of an equivalent expenditure of local and State-aid funds for that purpose. The local and State funds thus conserved—instead of money doled out by a menacingly paternalistic central government—could be used for teachers' salaries and other operating expenses of our schools. That is the way it should be.

Passage of the bill sponsored by Senator BRICKER and Representative BROWN would help the schools surmount the building crisis that now confronts them and it would in no way jeopardize one of democracy's strongest points: local control over the administration and curriculums of the public schools. The school lobby, carried on by the National Education Association and its State affiliates, could give evidence of unselfish devotion to our locally controlled public schools by giving support to the Bricker-Brown proposal and forgetting about the other subsidy bill, for which it has been overzealously crusading.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. On what basis will the annual appropriation of $250,000,000 be allocated to the 48 States?

Mr. BRICKER. There is a maximum to go to any one State, to be allocated under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Education, which will be subject to hearing upon application from any State, with an appeal to the Federal District Court, and finally the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr ROBERTSON. Then it is different from the allocation plan in my bill, which is to allocate on the basis of number of pupils of school age.

Mr. BRICKER. That is correct, the needs are to be determined by the Commissioner of Education. The allocation between the States and the Federal Government is to cost the Federal Government not less than 40 percent or more than 90 percent.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I did not catch that, the Federal Government's contribution is to be 40 percent?

Mr. BRICKER. Between 40 and 90 percent, and the State contribution would be from 10 to 60 percent, and that would be determined likewise by the rules and regulations, the basis of need to be fixed by a standard to be prescribed by the office of the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is likewise different from my bill, which would authorize a 50-percent grant and a 50-percent loan, if the State applied for it, from the RFC, at 2½-percent interest.

Mr. BRICKER. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I understood the Senator to say something about minimum requirements. Would the Federal Government control the architecture of the school buildings?

Mr. BRICKER. No; the plan is to be submitted by the State and approved by the Commissioner, and under the seventh paragraph, on page 10, section 43, there is provision for minimum standards—to be fixed in the discretion of the State—"for the maintenance and operation of schools which receive Federal aid under this part."

There is provision for "such methods of administration of the State plan, including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis (except that the Commissioner shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, or compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods), as the Commissioner prescribes by regulation under section 42 (e)."

Mr. ROBERTSON. In that respect it is again different from my bill, which leaves it to the States to decide what facilities they wish to provide.

Mr. BRICKER. Under my proposal, the original plan is submitted by the State, to be approved only by the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, if the Senator's amendment shall not be agreed to, I hope in due time he will give consideration to my bill, because it contains features which I think might appeal to him.

Mr. BRICKER. If the Senator from Virginia will indulge me, it has been suggested that my bill should be an amendment to the pending bill, and I have no doubt that many Senators would like to vote for the total appropriation. I am offering it merely as a substitute. Under it, there would not be the unlimited expense called for by Senate bill 246 by a recurrence year after year of the Federal contribution. The amendment fixes an end of Federal invasion of the public-school systems. It provides the facilities which are necessary to meet the increasing school population that is inevitable in the next 5 or 6 years. It leaves all control clearly and completely in the hands of the States and local governments.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I am very sympathetic with the substitute offered by the Senator for Ohio. I hope to support his amendment. For two sessions I have had a similar bill pending.

I now ask unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks a copy of Senate bill 39, introduced in the present session.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 39) to authorize the Federal Works Administration, as an adjunct to the Federal public-works program, to make loans and grants for the construction, remodeling, improvement, and extension of school facilities, introduced by Mr. McCARRAN on January 5, 1949, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act is necessary to implement the policy herein declared.

SEC. 2. Declaration of policy: The Congress hereby declares that—

The welfare and security of our country depend on adequate and proper education of our citizens;

Educational opportunities must, therefore, be freely afforded to all citizens of the United States, and to all children of school age;

The Federal Government has a national obligation to assist the States in providing these educational opportunities and can best discharge this obligation through Federal financial aid to the school authorities of the States for the construction of schools and school facilities; and

Such schools and school facilities, when so constructed, shall be operated and maintained by the appropriate school authorities of the State in accordance with State law and customs and without interference by the Federal Government.

SEC. 3. Authority to make loans and grants: The Federal Works Administrator is hereby authorized to make loans and grants to local school agencies for the construction, remodeling, improvement, or extension of school facilities, including (a) proper approaches thereto and utilities therefor, and (b) materials, supplies, articles, equipment, and machinery necessary therefor.

SEC. 4. Amount of grant: Except as provided in section 10, any grant made hereunder shall be in an amount equal to 50 percent of the cost, as determined by the Administrator, of the school facilities provided therewith.

SEC. 5. Conditions of loan: Any loan made hereunder shall bear interest at the rate of 2½ percent per annum, payable semiannually. No loan shall be made hereunder to any local school agency for the provision of school facilities unless, in the determination of the Administrator, such local school agency will be unable otherwise to finance its share of the cost of providing such school facilities except upon terms less favorable to it than the terms of said loan.

SEC. 6. Approval of State authorities: No loan or grant shall be made hereunder unless the school facilities proposed to be provided therewith shall have been approved by such State educational authority as may have jurisdiction or control of such school facilities.

SEC. 7. Prohibition against Federal Government supervision: No department or agency of the United States shall exercise any supervision or control over any school facilities with respect to which any funds have been or may be expended pursuant to this act, nor shall any term or condition of any agreement under this act relating to, or any loan or grant made under this act to or on behalf of, any such school, prescribe or affect its administration, personnel, curriculum, instruction, methods of instruction, or materials for instruction.

SEC. 8. Method of construction; wages and hours: (a) The construction work and labor in each State shall be done in accordance with its laws, and under the direct supervision of the appropriate State agency, subject to the inspection and approval of the Administrator and in accordance with the rules and regulations made by him pursuant to this act: Provided, That all contracts pursuant to this act which involve labor shall contain provisions establishing minimum rates of wages, to be predetermined by the State, which contractors shall pay to skilled and unskilled labor, and such minimum rates shall be stated in the invitation for bids and shall be included in proposals or bids for the work. Such rules and regulations shall require such cost and progress reporting by the supervising State agency to the Administrator as the Administrator may by regulation prescribe.

(b) All contracts let for construction projects and all loans and grants pursuant to this act shall contain such provisions as are necessary to insure (1) that no convict labor shall be employed on any such project; (2) that (except in executive, administrative, and supervisory position:), so far as practicable and feasible, no individual directly employed on any such project shall be permitted to work more than 40 hours in any one week; and (3) that in the employment of labor in connection with any such project (except in executive, administrative, and supervisory positions), preference shall be given, where they are qualified, first to persons honorably discharged from the military service of the United States, as defined in section 101 (1) of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Relief Act of 1940, and then to citizens of the United States and aliens who have declared their intention of becoming citizens, who are bona fide residents of the State in which the work is to be performed: Provided, That these preferences shall apply only where such labor is available and qualified to perform the work to which the employment relates.

(c) The acquisition of articles, materials, and supplies, wholly or in part with funds appropriated pursuant to this act, shall be subject to the provisions of section 2, of title III of the Treasury and Post Office Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1934; and all contracts let pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be subject to the provisions of section 3 of title III of such act.

(d) Any allocation, grant, or other distribution of funds for any project, pursuant to this act, shall contain stipulations which will provide for the application of title III of the Treasury and Post Office Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1934, to the acquisition of articles, materials, and supplies for use in carrying out such project.

SEC. 9. Apportionment of funds: (a) As soon as possible after any appropriation is made under section 11 (a), 75 percent of the amount thereof available for grants for projects in the several States shall be apportioned by the Administrator among the several States, one-half in the proportion which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States and one-half in the proportion which Federal tax collections from all sources (exclusive of taxes on imports and exports) within each State during the fiscal year next preceding the calendar year in which such apportionment is made bears to the total of all Federal tax collections (exclusive of taxes on imports and exports) during such fiscal year. All sums so apportioned for a State shall be available only for payment of grants for the provision of school facilities located within such State. Upon making an apportionment as provided in this subsection, the Administrator shall inform the executive head of each State, and any public agency therein which has requested such information, as to the sums apportioned for each State. As used in this subsection, the term "population" means the population according to the latest decennial census of the United States.

(b) All moneys appropriated under section 11 (a) which are available for grants for school facilities and which are not apportioned as provided in subsection (a) of this section shall constitute a discretionary fund and may be used by the Administrator, in his discretion, for the making of grants for the provision of school facilities in States which shall have received as grants under this act less than one-fifth of 1 percent of the total theretofore made available for such grants, and on the basis of comparative need regardless of the States in which such facilities are located.

SEC. 10. School facilities and public-land States: In the case of any State containing unappropriated and unreserved public lands and nontaxable Indian lands (individual and tribal) exceeding 5 percent of the total area of all lands therein, the amount of any grant made under section 3 hereof shall be increased by whichever is the smaller of the following percentages thereof:

(a) 25 percent, or

(b) a percentage equal to one-half the percentage that the area of all such lands in such State is of its total area.

SEC. 11. Authorization of appropriations: (a) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually such sums as may be necessary for the making of loans and grants hereunder.

(b) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually such sums as may be necessary for administrative expenses in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 12. This act may be cited as the "School Construction Act."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I think it should at least be stated that, as the Senator from Nevada has suggested, there have been introduced several bills providing for school buildings. None of them has as yet been considered by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare or the Public Works Committee. None of those bills has had committee consideration. If the amendment of the Senator from Ohio should be agreed to, it would completely destroy the pending bill. Therefore I trust it will be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] in the nature of a substitute. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] is absent on official business.

So Mr. BRICKER'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on last Friday, when the committee amendments to the bill were adopted, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] raised a question as to the committee amendment to insert certain language, beginning in line 6 and ending in line 10, on page 9 of the bill. I suggested to the Senator from Iowa that the committee amendments be adopted, and then we could examine this particular committee amendment further, and if on further examination the Senator felt there should be some modification of it, I would ask for reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to, so he could offer an amendment to the amendment. I have consulted with the Senator from Iowa and also with the senior Senator from Utah

[Mr. THOMAS], the chairman of the committee, and have also consulted with the distinguished ranking minority member of the committee, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. We are in agreement that it might be wise to modify the committee amendment. I therefore ask that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to on last Friday be reconsidered, in order that I may offer an amendment to the amendment on behalf of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment on page 9, beginning in line 6 and ending in line 10, was adopted, will be reconsidered.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Iowa I offer an amendment to the committee amendment on page 9, to strike out, in lines 9 and 10, the words "and give him upon request access to the records on which such reports are based." This language of the committee amendment would give to the United States Commissioner of Education in Washington access to the records upon which the report to the Commissioner, telling how the money has been expended, is based. What the amendment to the committee amendment does is simply to strike these words, so the Commissioner will have no right to have access to any records in a State. As I said, I have consulted with the chairman of the committee and the distinguished Senator from Ohio, and we are in agreement that the words may be eliminated. Therefore, I ask that the amendment to the committee amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] on behalf of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I think it would be enlightening to the Senate if there were inserted in the RECORD at this point a 10-column chart which I have prepared based on the bill.

The first column shows the States.

The second gives expenditures for public, elementary, and secondary education, 1945–46.

The third, the average daily attendance, white schools.

The fourth, the expenditures per pupil in average daily attendance, white schools.

The fifth, the average daily attendance, colored schools.

The sixth, the expenditures per pupil in average daily attendance, colored schools.

The seventh, percentage of colored race to total population in 1940 census.

The eighth, allotment under Senate bill 246, in thousands of dollars.

The ninth, amount required to be spent out of allotment for colored schools; and

The tenth, the resulting increase in expenditures per pupil in average daily attendance, colored schools, on basis of 1946–47 figures.

I ask unanimous consent that this chart, which I have worked out to the best of my ability based on the various reports from the Office of Education and from the report of the committee, may be inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

State	Expenditures for public, elementary, and secondary education, 1945–46 (thousands of dollars)	Average daily attendance, white schools, 1945–46	Expenditures per pupil in average daily attendance, white schools, 1945–46	Average daily attendance, colored schools, 1945–46	Expenditures per pupil in average daily attendance, colored schools, 1945–46	Percentage of colored race in total population (1940 census)	Allotment under S. 246 (thousands of dollars)	Amount required to be spent out of allotment for colored schools (thousands of dollars)	Resulting increase in expenditures per pupil in average daily attendance, colored schools, on basis of 1946–47 figures (even dollars)

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, there are one or two questions I should like to propound for my own enlightenment. I was very much interested in the able remarks made by my good friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] the other day when he opened the debate on the bill. I wonder if I may have his attention for a few questions.

Is it correct to state that under this bill any State, in order to secure its Federal allotment, must devote a total, including Federal, State, and local funds, of at least $55 per pupil in average daily attendance to the schools in each school district in the State, including both white and colored schools?

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. Can the Senator say how many States now spend less than $55 per pupil in average daily attendance in colored schools?

Mr. HILL. I think I have the figures here. I do not have them at my finger tips, but if the Senator will pass to the next question we shall endeavor to obtain the information for him.

Mr. McCARRAN. What are the States, by name, and what do they spend per pupil? Does the Senator have that information?

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator repeat his question?

Mr. McCARRAN. Name the States; and what does each of those States spend per pupil?

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator mean the States now spending less than $55?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I cannot give the Senator that information offhand. As the Senator knows, it varies in the different school districts. A State might have some school districts in which $55 per child, or even more, is being spent; and it might have some school districts in which less than $55 per child is being spent.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say that from my study of the subject, I find that Alabama spends $37.59 per child. Kansas spends——

Mr. HILL. I do not know what the source of the Senator's information is, but I will say that the Senator's information is wrong if he means that that is the average expenditure in the State of Alabama. As I say, the expenditures in the different school districts vary. Some expend a great deal more than others; but the average expenditure in the State of Alabama today, according to the latest figures, is $66.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am taking my information from the reports of the Office of Education, and also from the report of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I think there is some misunderstanding. As I understand the Senator from Nevada, he asked what the expenditures were in the colored schools.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct. I am speaking of the colored schools.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the Senator that I do not have available at this moment the break-down as between the white schools and the colored schools.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have tried to get that break-down myself, to my own satisfaction, and I wish to read the information relating to the colored schools.

Alabama spends $37.59 per pupil.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Under the terms of the bill, if the figure of $37.59 be correct, if the State of Alabama is to receive Federal money and participate in the program, the $37.59 will have to come up to a minimum of $55.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is exactly what I am driving at. The figure for Arkansas is $34.93; for Georgia, $31.14; for Louisiana, $43.81.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at that point?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I suggest to the Senator that his figures are about 2 years behind the times. He will find that the Louisiana Legislature, in the last session, doubled the amount of State aid to colored education, with the result that at the present time the figure is about twice what the chart indicates. I worked it out a while ago. For State aid alone in colored education, per child between the proper ages for attendance at school in Louisiana, the figure is about $58 per colored child subject to education.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am glad to know that; but what I am driving at does not hinge so much on the answer of the Senator. My figures are taken from the report of the Office of Education for 1946 and 1947.

Mr. LONG. The only point I have in mind is that that does not take into account the great increase in Louisiana alone in the past year or so.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I invite the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that in South Carolina there has been put into effect a certification act, which applies equally to colored and white teachers. There is the same proviso, that they pass the examinations. It will be found that in the past 2 years that has increased the salaries of colored teachers considerably.

Mr. McCARRAN. Has increased what?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It has increased the salaries of the colored teachers considerably during the past 2 years.

Mr. McCARRAN. My figures are taken on a certain basis. The Senator from Louisiana is undoubtedly entirely correct as of the present date. I am leading up to a final question. I continue to read:

The figure for Mississippi is $14.74 per pupil; for South Carolina, $29.64.

I should like to ask one further question, and then I shall have concluded.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. HILL. If those particular States participate in the program and receive the funds to which they are entitled, all those figures must come up to a minimum of $55.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is exactly what I am driving at. I think this will be my last question.

Is it not true that the States which now contribute less than $55 per pupil must go to their respective legislatures for the increase, if they have not already done so?

Mr. HILL. They will. They will have to come up to a certain standard, and they will have to go to their legislatures to do so. I will say to the Senator that the figure which I gave the Senator of $66 expenditure per child for Alabama was the figure for 1945–46. Today that expenditure is substantially higher.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "each fiscal year thereafter" and insert in lieu thereof "the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951."

On page 5, beginning with line 5, it is proposed to strike out over through line 6 on page 6.

On page 6, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "(F)" and insert in lieu thereof "(E)."

On page 6, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "(G)" and insert in lieu thereof "(F)."

On page 10, beginning with line 7, it is proposed to strike out over through line 15 on page 11.

On page 11, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, I gather that the Senate does not want to be delayed by further amendments, and I do not propose to take more than a minute and a half of the time of the Senate.

All this amendment does is to give the bill 2 years in which to operate. I feel that 2 years would give it a fair trial. If it is what Senators think it is, in 2 years I am sure they will extend it. If it is not what they think it is, it will require no action on the part of the Congress.

We have heard a great deal about economy. However, from the votes on the various amendments I gather that the Senate will pass Senate bill 246. But when it comes to economy, I think this is a good way to express some form of economy, by limiting the operation of the bill to 2 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not expect to detain the Senate very long. We are about to take a step which is decisive in the history of America. I am opposed to the pending bill. For that reason I wish to make my position clear. I think it should be made clear for the record. I want the people of Nebraska and the people of the United States to know how I feel about what is being done at this session of Congress.

We have already passed a public-housing bill. We know what that means. We are about to pass a Federal-aid-to-education bill. We know what that will lead to. We are going to have socialized medicine, and we are going to socialize industry. Then we shall be entirely over the line into state socialism.

Mr. President, Federal aid to education sounds good.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I decline to yield until I finish my statement. Then I shall be glad to yield.

We are all for education—the more the better. It is like good health, good homes, good wages, good profits. We all want these things.

But Congress is being deluged with schemes to provide all this and more. They are attractively packaged. With the consent of the Senate, I have had inserted into the RECORD a series of articles from the Baltimore Sun, giving the cost of the social-welfare programs submitted by the President. The monetary cost over a period of 50 years would be $1,250,000,000,000.

Mr. President, I hope all Members of the Senate will remember those figures as long as they live—$1,250,000,000,000. As I said on one occasion, 1,250,000,000,000 silver dollars would make seven stacks of silver dollars reaching to the moon, with enough left over to pay all the taxes for a year, and pay off the national debt, which now totals a quarter of a trillion dollars. Yes; these are fantastic figures. But they are true. Mr. President, Senators should get used to the word "trillion." We are just about at the point of having to use that word; it will not be long before we will have to use it. When I first came to the Senate we used to speak in terms of millions of dollars. Later we came to use the word "billions." But now we are about to have to begin to use the words "trillions of dollars."

Mr. President, I think one of the finest statements of the over-all expansion program which we already have, and which is included in the Truman program, is revealed in that great newspaper, the Baltimore Sun, and should be studied by every Senator and every citizen of the United States.

I am opposed to this bill for another reason, namely, because I was brought up in a State with a basic background of pioneers. All of us know that the early pioneers learned while they lived across the ocean that mixing government and education is a bad thing. They knew from bitter experience the results which come when education is controlled and used for the propaganda of the government. I think the committee has done as good a job as anyone could do, to try to avoid governmental control of education. Yet I say that, as a Congress, if we appropriate money for education, we cannot avoid Federal control of education. If we appropriate money, we do control. Although I disagree with the distinguished Senator from Utah, for whom I have the greatest respect, and whom I questioned yesterday on the floor of the Senate, yet I must say in regard to the provisions of the bill that I do not believe a better job can be done in trying to avoid Federal control. But, Mr. President, when the Congress appropriates money, Federal control is mandatory.

I wish to point out again the answer given by the distinguished Senator from Ohio in reply to a question asked about control. He said that the danger is that we shall have Federal control of education, regardless of the provisions we write into this bill; that regardless of what provisions we place in it, we shall be putting the Federal Government's foot in the door; that we cannot control the actions of future Congresses, of course; and that we can expect more power to be exercised by the Federal Government as more appropriations for this purpose are made by future Congresses.

In order to prevent that very thing from happening in their new world, the pioneers resorted to very effective checks; they separated public elementary and secondary education from political control, and I think they rightly did so. They separated them entirely from the functions of the Federal Government; and they placed education under State and local control, where I think it belongs. Some Senators may disagree with me, but that is my feeling about the matter. Indeed, Mr. President, the pioneers placed education still closer to the people, closer to the parents of the children in the schools, by establishing State and local school boards—home rule in the cities, home rule in the counties, home rule in the towns. Those far-seeing pioneers were alive to the importance of education. They exempted private and parochial schools from taxation. They acted wisely. All history proves the correctnes. of their decision. Their decision to keep education and politics separated was dictated by bitter experience. Such a decision is as correct today as it was when the pioneers defined the principles which were to govern our country.

As I said a moment ago, the power to tax is the power to destroy. Let us add to that the statement that the power to tax is the power to control. There is another old saying that applies here: "He who pays the fiddler calls the tune." Mr. President, Federal aid to education means Federal control. It is my humble opinion, speaking only for myself—of course, I realize that it is impossible to defeat this bill; nevertheless, I make this statement in voicing my utterly sincere belief, even if I am alone in voting against the bill—that in the years to come, Federal aid to education will mean Federal control of education. I cannot escape that conclusion; that is my honest belief in this matter. When I cast my vote against this bill, I shall do so because I do not want to have the Federal Government reach into the local communities and control the schools for such purposes as the Federal Government may see fit to use them. Of course, Senators may have their differences of opinion as to that matter, and some may say that I am mistaken. I realize that the opposition to the bill will be very small. Nevertheless, Mr. President, what I have stated is my honest belief. I fear that the time will come when the present Members of the Senate will rue the day when they voted for this bill. I warn against the proposed step, because it will be a far-reaching, decisive step in the history of the Nation.

The Federal Government should not tamper with the school systems of our States and municipalities. Just as sure as rain once the Federal Government starts putting money into the schools, it will, step by step, invade the rights and responsibilities of the States.

It is said that the pending bill provides safeguards against that very intrusion. I wish to say once again that the able Senator from Utah, for whom I have the highest respect, has done what appears to be as good a job as anyone could do in attempting to safeguard school systems of America from Federal intrusion and encroachment; and I entertain the opinion that he and the other Members of the Senate who share his views sincerely believe that this bill, when enacted, will not result in Federal encroachment upon local school control. However, I take a different view. I think experience with these matters indicates that once the principle of having the Federal Government attempt to equalize educational facilities across the Nation is adopted, the barriers provided in the pending bill will be whittled away. Ways will be found to intrude Federal control into the public-school systems of the States and local communities.

Education is a responsibility of the States under our Constitution, under our customs and long tradition. The Federal Government has no right to intrude in the field of education, because it is an intimate, family, and local community responsibility. Our people are jealous of that right and they should be. Parents want to keep close control over the schooling of their children.

Mr. President, I do not want to see the education of our youth planned by any bureaucrats in Washington, according to their ideas of what constitute a proper education.

It is my opinion that those States which are pleading for help from the Federal Government to pay their school bills some day will regret their action. I think they are selling their birthright for a mess of pottage. I think they will be annoyed by carpetbaggers from Washington, who will be looking into their books, looking into their accounts, checking on how they have divided the funds coming from the Federal Treasury. They will come as a plague, endeavoring to make all the children of the land conform to a common mold in their education. I believe it will not be long before they will prescribe the subjects that shall be taught, and how they shall be taught.

In course of time, with this bill enacted into law as the starter, we shall see federally appointed school teachers being ordered into this State or that State—all in the name of education, but all a perversion of education.

Mr. President, we have heard statements to the effect that some of the States are poor. However, let me say that a State is no poorer than the morale and fiber of its people. Any State can bring its education facilities up to standard if it has the will to do so and the determination to impose the necessary taxes upon its own citizens for the education of their own children. We have no backward States in America. They are all progressive and civic-minded. The pending bill puts upon some of the States a label they do not deserve.

During the past 16 years, and especially since last November's Presidential election, there has been an ever-increasing drive to centralize government and power in Washington. As I have said before, there have been drives for socialized medicine; federally subsidized homes; demands by the President for power to build and operate steel plants and other industries; power demanded by the President to issue edicts putting ceilings over prices and wages, and floors under prices and wages; power to control the farmers in the name of security and by means of hand-outs from the Federal Treasury—in all, a socialistic program, to have the Government at Washington take care of the people from the cradle to the grave, and to do the thinking and planning for the 148,000,000 free Americans.

It is naive to think such an administration would keep its hands off education, once it takes the taxpayers' money and distributes it by the millions of dollars across the land. Let us remember that.

We are told the appropriation is only $300,000,000. Are we to believe that is all it is to be? The $300,000,000 authorization of the pending bill is only a starter, it is only the beginning. I have only been in the Senate 7 years, but I have never seen a bureau become smaller. They want more and more power, more and more money. That is the experience I have had in Washington, and that is exactly what will occur in this matter. The $300,000,000 authorization is a small fraction of the educational cost of the Nation. But let the regimenters at Washington get their foot in the door, and they will expand the appropriation and, by stages, take over the school systems. Always, there will be a glowing argument—always we shall be told that it is being done for our own good.

Certainly Senators may disagree. There are those, just as sincere, who take the opposite view, that under the bill there will be encroachment on the part of the Federal Government. I am simply stating the way I feel about it. I come from a State of pioneers who believe in frugality, who believe in the protection of freedom of opportunity. They believe in their school system, and they believe it should be controlled locally, not by the Federal Government.

At this point in my remarks, I desire to read into the RECORD a resolution adopted in January 1949, by the legislature of the State of Nebraska, in its sixty-first session assembled. It bespeaks, I think, the feeling of the people of my State in their attitude toward Federal education—yes, or socialized medicine, or socialized housing, or any other socialization that may be proposed. As I cast my vote against the pending bill, I am proud of this expression by the legislature of my State:

A resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

"Legislative Resolution 5

"Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to defeat Federal aid to education

"Whereas there is pending in the Congress of the United States a bill, Senate file No. 246, providing Federal aid to elementary and secondary schools of the United States; and

"Whereas should this bill be enacted into law, there is reason to believe that it will lead inevitably to Federal control and supervision of the public schools of the Nation, thereby taking control out of the hands of the local districts; and

"Whereas the several States are now able through their own taxing powers to make ample provision for their elementary and secondary schools without Federal aid; and

"Whereas the Federal Government is already burdened with a staggering debt of more than $250,000,000,000, calling for retrenchment if the solvency of the United States is to be preserved: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the members of the Nebraska Legislature in sixty-first session assembled:

"1. That Senate file No. 246, or any similar legislation now before the Congress of the United States, be defeated.

"2. That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the clerk of the legislature to the Vice President of the United States as Presiding Officer of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Member of the Congress of the United States from Nebraska."

I call particular attention to the statement contained in the resolution that, should the pending bill be enacted into law, it will, in the opinion of the legislature, lead inevitably to Federal control. I also emphasize this statement:

Whereas the Federal Government is already burdened with a staggering debt of more than $250,000,000,000.

I call it one-quarter of a trillion dollars.

Mr. President, I repeat what I said in the Eightieth Congress when a similar bill was pending, and I reaffirm everything I said at that time. I cannot bring myself to support the bill. Certainly, I want education, but I want something more—I want the school systems to remain free from encroachment by the Federal Government. I think education is a local responsibility and should always remain so.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I realize the hour is late, and a good many Senators who are present are clamoring for a vote. Let me say that Senators who are proposing now to do the political thing, the popular thing, will live to rue the day when they put the Federal Government into the field of education. We are dealing with an important, vital, matter. I care not that Senators cry "Vote, vote, vote!" I am going to talk as long as I want to on the subject here at hand. If Senators who are proposing to do the political thing and the popular thing today would listen to some of the words spoken at this time, perhaps a few years from now they would remember them and would change their tune.

Mr. President, there are very few of us who are not mindful of the problems peculiar to our educational systems and to the teaching profession. I have a special advantage in understanding the seriousness of the problems and the continuing need for attention to them. That special advantage is based upon personal experience. I began my public career as a school teacher. I taught for a period of several years. I believe I am as well aware as most other citizens of the burdens of the teaching profession and of the shortcoming and inadequacies of the educational systems of various towns, cities, and States. I am aware of the fact that there is a pressing need in many areas for a higher educational standard, and I am aware that in many areas there are lacking financial resources to meet that need.

The issue of Federal aid to education is a very serious one, and it touches the most sensitive convictions of many Senators. We know that in the communities throughout the country there is an increasing demand on the part of citizens themselves for Federal dollars, which would be made available to them under the terms of the pending legislation. In the face of such an increasing demand, we owe a certain responsibility to help the citizens adequately to pay the men and women who teach the young, the men and women who shoulder so great a responsibility for the kind of American generations which will follow our own.

I think, Mr. President, the committee which had under consideration the pending bill, a committee headed by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and including the ranking minority member, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], have done an excellent job from their point of view. I think they have approached it in a conscientious manner, and I think that, from the point of view of today, they have written into the bill as many safeguards as they thought possible, safeguards which they believed to be adequate to control the course of events. But, Mr. President, when the Federal Government puts its foot in the door of education, it is taking a very, very long step. When the Federal Government starts interference with either education or religion, it is taking a step from which it may not be able to recede.

Tonight, as we are gathered in the Senate, Senator after Senator realizes the seriousness of the step. What has happened, I may say, so far as I, as a Senator, am concerned—and I think many other Senators have had the same experience—is that I have received, I venture to say, a hundred letters, telegrams, and other communications supporting the bill, for every one I have received opposing it. Naturally, if I desired to be a hero, if I desired to be popular, if I desired to do the political thing, I should vote for the bill. Apparently some Members of this body do not want to hear a few facts on this question, but, so far as I am concerned, they will hear them, and if the Senate is not in order I shall not attempt to proceed.

Mr. President, if a Senator had received 100 letters, telegrams, and communications in favor of the bill to 1 against it, and he wanted political success, or wanted to be a popular hero in the eyes of the general public, what would he do? He would vote for the bill.

I again pay tribute to the committee, because I think it has done a good job. I think the Senator from Utah, the Senator from Ohio, and other Senators have really done a conscientious job. This bill is far different from and far better than some of the bills on this subject which have been before this body in the past; but, nevertheless, and regardless of the kind of a job the committee did, regardless of the fine objectives sought, if the Senate shall pass this bill, as it will, I doubt if there are 18 votes against it, the Senators who stand up and vote "Nay" should have the appreciation of citizens generally for their courage and foresight.

In the face of such an increasing demand, we know there are certain responsibilities and a desire on the part of many people to help contribute to school expenses. We all want to help to pay adequately the men and women who teach the young. But as to whether this bill should pass and Federal aid should be given to assist in improving educational standards throughout the country, there are sincere and fundamental differences of opinion. Those differences prevail in the Senate and in every community which would benefit from favorable action by the Congress on this measure. In my State of New Hampshire, which is a fair cross section of the Nation, some of the finest, the most sincere, the most conscientious citizens are supporting this measure. Equally, some of the finest, the ablest, and most sincere citizens of my State are opposed to it. But there is a strong popular movement, Mr. President, to get the Federal Government into the field of education.

At first, education was a local problem. Then it became, in some places, a county problem, and then a State problem. We have gone a long way in the field of education, and there are many ways in which the Federal Government can help. For example, it can aid in building schools in communities which are unable to meet such a financial strain.

This bill is a different proposition from that. Each of us has learned by hard experience that the popular position is not always the wise position. We have learned by hard experience that worthy as some legislative proposals are when measured by need, they are not so worthy when measured by what is best for the future of our people.

When we examine history of countries which have succumbed to dictatorships, we find they were the ones that moved in the direction of central control by the government. They started with the youth. They set to work to mold the minds of the youth, through education controlled by strong central governments, dictating the methods, the textbooks, and so forth. That is barred in this bill, but just so surely as the Presiding Officer is sitting in the chair we shall see it come about. That is a problem which should cause us to reflect.

Religion and education are two things in which the Federal Government should not participate. The church and the school should be separated from the Central Government. That has been true in the past, and it is true today.

The purpose of education, Mr. President, is to make men free and keep them free. There is little in the experience of the American people or other people who have acceded to paternal programs of national governments to indicate that the final result to the citizen in return for educational aid will be what we hold is the purpose of education today. I grant that such a danger is probably not inherent in the measure which we are now considering, but such a danger is seldom inherent in the first step of an undertaking of this kind. The real danger arises as the grants increase and the demands for control begin. If we live a normal life we shall see the Federal Government edge further and further into the picture of education.

Let me again make it clear that I appreciate the good intentions of most of those who defend Federal-aid-to-education programs. But what assurance can we have that such good intentions will always control? It may be that experience in connection with this particular undertaking will prove my position to be wrong. I hope so. It appears that the measure will pass. I hope that the potential dangers which I have mentioned will not arise; and if Federal aid to education is authorized and if experience over a proper period of time proves that it is administered with benefit to our people and without injury to their freedom, I shall be among the first to rally to the support of the program.

Mr. President, I shall not take more time tonight, but I simply want to say that when the roll is called here, in a short time, there will not be a Senator who votes "nay" on this measure who will not know he is doing an unpopular thing among people generally and a very unpolitical thing. Every Senator who votes "nay" knows that he is one of a small minority here. I want to commend the Senators who will stand up here tonight and vote "nay," because we are taking a far-reaching step tonight, starting down a road the end of which no one here knows. Some day, in my judgment, the average Senator of the United States who votes in favor of this bill, will rue the day he so voted. I think that day will not be many years distant.

Again, Mr. President, in closing, I pay tribute to the committee that worked on this bill; but I do not believe they realize the end results, and just what they are leading this country into.

Mr. President, I say I hope the bill will be defeated. I know it will not be defeated, because the rush will be on, and the vote will be overwhelming. But I merely wish to join with other Senators who tonight see the end results of the step we are about to take. I hope I will be around the Senate for some years to come, and I think I will be. I expect to be around as long as most of those who are here, and I expect in the years to come to have many of those who vote for this bill come and say that they regretted their action. I say with all sincerity, from the bottom of my heart that, I believe in lifting our educational standards; I want to work to the same objective the sponsors of this bill seek; I desire to help in every way possible; but I do not want my government, my Federal Government, the Central Government of the United States, to take two steps, one in the direction of the control of education, and the other of religion.

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, it is with considerable reluctance that I rise to oppose the pending bill, after the very many able speeches which have preceded what I am about to say.

I think we are all in hearty accord with the objectives of the bill. We are all vitally interested in seeing the boys and girls of America have the best chances and the best education possible. We have no quarrel with those objectives at all.

There are some of us, however, who feel that the time has long gone by to advocate Federal aid for our public school system. This was first called to the attention of the Nation 13 years ago, when practically every State in the Union was in debt head over heels, and on the verge of bankruptcy. Many schools had to be closed. The teachers were underpaid. In many instances State warrants were not cashable. But did the people of the States, through their Representatives and Senators, come to Washington and demand and insist that they had to have Federal aid to conduct their public schools? No, they did not. They consolidated their schools. They went to work. Many mothers taught their own children, and taught neighbors' children, and got along during that precarious period.

Mr. President, I hope we will never have to suffer another experience such as that. Yet the American people got along some way, progressed, kept their schools intact, retained local control of their schools during that difficult time, and never once came to Washington and demanded that the Federal Government help them in their public school systems.

We have made tremendous progress in our schools during the past 13 years. We have better school houses; I think we have just as good or better teachers, and I know we pay them more, even though Heaven knows we still do not pay them enough. We are making progress.

I call the attention of the Senate to this factual evidence. Between 1936, when the first real drive, the first inkling that $300,000,000 were needed to support our schools, and 1947, the last year for which the Office of Education figures are available, State and local support for schools rose from $1,656,800,000 to more than $3,124,550,000. That is an increase of $1,467,750,000, or five times the $300,000,000 asked for in the pending bill.

If the proponents of the bill say that it is necessary to have this aid in order to equalize educational opportunities, in other words, that this is a bill for equalization, I say that it is indeed a poor equalization bill. The only way we can possibly have equalization effectively and efficiently is by having it on the State level, through the State superintendents of schools, and through the State boards of education and the State legislatures. Then we can go into every county in each and every district and thoroughly and properly equalize the educational facilities and advantages for every child in the State. That cannot be done from Washington.

What is being done here? Instead of having an equlization bill, we have really a State classification bill. We are classifying the States of the United States into a rich group and a poor group. That is grossly unfair to the States which are put in the rich category, and grossly unjust and unfair to the Southern States which are put in the poor group class, because in the United States every Commonwealth which has statehood under the American flag is most fortunate, and its people are the most fortunate in the entire world. Likewise, all the people of our States are the richest people in the world.

Mr. President, with all the fervency at my command, I say that, in my honest and humble opinion, any State that is not willing by some means or manner to look after its little children through the primary schools, is not worthy of statehood. There is no State in this country in such a category. I have not seen any States coming to Washington and telling us, as Representatives and Senators, that they must have this Federal aid to education, or all their children will grow up illiterate. It may be noted in connection with this attempted classification that the State of Texas, one of the richest States in the Union, has been classified in the category of a poor State. If that were not so ridiculous, it would be humorous, to say the least.

Mr. President, judging from the tone and temperament of the Senate there is no probability, in my opinion, that the bill will be set aside at this late moment. It seems that the Senate of the United States is bound and determined to make the newest and the most radical departure in our history as it pertains to our schools, our general education system. I say that we are considering a matter which is very serious. What is proposed to be done now is unfair to the States that do not need the money that would be given under the bill. It is grossly unfair to the States that will be the recipients of money provided by the bill, and yet do not need it.

The two eminent and distinguished Senators from Maryland yesterday told us on the floor of the Senate that their State did not want Federal aid to education. The senior Senator from Maryland submitted an amendment providing that his State and some other States be deleted from the bill. But no, the Senate would not accept his amendment. His State does not want Federal aid, but we are going to force it on that State, whether it likes it or not. We are going to tell that State, and other States which do not need the money, "We have so much money we do not know what to do with it, so we are going to force you to take it whether you need or do not need it."

The very eminent and distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] made a statement on the floor of the Senate this afternoon which should convince any man who reads and thinks that the United States Government certainly does not have any money to give away unnecessarily. He also demonstrated most clearly that the only possible way for the Federal Government to obtain one single dollar is to take it out of the very school districts the bill purports to help.

I know that teachers' associations throughout the country are back of the bill. I cannot blame them for the attitude they take, because they have been misled into believing that if the Federal-aid-to-education bill is passed their salaries will be increased. There is nothing in the bill, however, which guaranties that their salaries will be increased by a 5-cent piece. Did not the distinguished senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] offer an amendment this afternoon which would require that 75 percent of these funds should go to raising the salaries of teachers? The Senate by an overwhelming vote defeated that amendment. I want the teachers of my State to know that if the bill is passed, they will have less chance than they have ever had to have their salaries increased. Why do I say that? For the simple reason that the Federal Government proposes to drag out of the State of Montana, my State, $575,000 a year. If the bill is passed Montana will be $575,000 poorer each year and will have that much less to support the schools and pay the teachers of the State.

California is in a worse fix than Montana. The Federal Government proposes to drag out of California $17,970,000 which California would have if we should kill the bill. If we kill the bill California would have $17,970,000 more to support its schools and to take care of teachers' salaries.

How about New York? New York would have $27,200,000 more to support its schools and pay its teachers if we should kill the bill.

Let us look at some of the so-called poor States. Take Mississippi, for instance. It is true that Mississippi would benefit under the bill. But Mississippi has made great strides in her educational system during the past few years since the war ended. She is doing excellent work in matters of education. If we kill the bill, and if we discount the extra money Mississippi would receive under the bill, she would have $2,262,000 more than she otherwise would have to support her schools.

How about Louisiana? If we kill the bill Louisiana would have $3,793,000 more with which to support her educational institutions.

Mr. President, I say that money does not grow on bushes in and around Washington. I say that every single dollar the Federal Government takes in must be dragged out of the school districts throughout the country, in the towns, and in the cities—the very school districts the bill is intended to help.

I have been profoundly impressed by the arguments advanced by the eminent Senators who have during the past week stood on the floor of the Senate and defended the Federal-aid-to-education bill. But to my memory not one single Senator omitted to express his fear of Federal control by reason of the provisions of the bill. That fear was recently expressed by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. In fact, the very able and distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who has done everything he could to see to it that there will be no Federal interference with the States, yesterday on the floor of the Senate in a debate with the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] made a statement which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Wednesday, May 4, 1949, on page 5584:

> Furthermore, I do not think we should relax all control. I do not think the purpose is as stated by the Senator from Connecticut, in effect, to take off all Federal control so that the State can spend the money as if it were its own money. I think it would be a very unwise disposition of money collected by a Federal tax.

The Senator from Ohio said further:

> It seems to me we have done the best we could in the bill. I do not see how there can be a better protection against interference by the Federal Government with the States than that which we have in the bill. It provides that there shall be no interference. It provides for a State plan.

> I think the Federal Government has an obligation to see that the money is spent for education. It has an obligation to see that each school receives a minimum amount. I think there should be that obligation. I think we should have a right to cut off the money if that particular obligation is not performed. It is a mechanical obligation.

Mr. President, I realize that the distinguished Senator from Ohio is fearful of Federal interference, and has done everything possible to protect the public-school system of the United States by language contained in the bill. Yet he admits that there is control. He goes further and admits that there must be some kind of control, even though it is only mechanical, so long as we are appropriating Federal funds.

Mr. President, there are many inherent evils lurking in this bill, which have been brought out not necessarily by the opponents of the bill, but admitted and explained by the advocates of the bill. There are so many inherent evils in the bill that the United States Senate, this evening at this late hour, should kill the bill deader than a doornail.

It is still fundamental that he who controls the purse strings controls the purse. The Supreme Court of the United States has handed down decisions supporting that statement. As soon as this bill goes into effect the clamor will begin for ever larger and larger appropriations. We all know that to be so. The propaganda to this end will be tremendous. Do Senators believe for a moment that in order to get more and more money the school districts and State educational authorities will not ultimately succumb to the temptation to surrender control for the sake of more money from the Federal Treasury? If Senators believe that, I ask them to reflect on what has happened in every other field of Federal financial assistance to the States.

What is going to keep the President or a political party from making a political issue out of more money for school aid? What is going to keep a President or a political party from going forth at campaign time and trying to scare the people into believing that if the other side wins the school money will be cut off, or if their side wins the assistance will be increased? If Senators say to me that this would not happen and could not happen, I must remind them that comparable things happened last year, and that they are happening even today.

I remind my distinguished colleagues that it would be most difficult to wage a campaign of any kind if they were up against a candidate or a political party who had no scruples, but would go to the length of even promising the moon to the people for votes. Our primary and secondary system of education would be dragged through the mire of politics at every election. The result might be to cause the absolute demise of the two-party system of government.

If we do not mend our ways, especially so far as the Federal Government is concerned, I venture to say that before too long we shall have a one-party system that will be in control of the country, and that party will be made up of a crowd of "gimmies" and "moochers."

Mr. President, as I have stated, there are a great many inherent evils lurking in this bill. It is a new and most radical departure. I beg of this able and eminent body yet to turn back before it is too late.

We can take care of our children. We have Federal aid for our colleges. We have vocational education. We are pouring Federal funds, in some form or other, into every State, every county, every community, and practically every hamlet. But let the people in the school districts, where they live and where their children grow up, take care of their school system themselves. Let us have at least one thing in these great United States with which the Federal Government is not interfering.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] said that he would take all the time he wanted in order to present his side of the case. Therefore, I shall briefly present this matter of precedent of a State taking Federal money for education.

We have listened to the very able Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON]. Unfortunately, my friend, the Senator from Montana, and I am very proud to call him my friend, is not as familiar with what happened in the State of Montana as is the senior Senator from North Dakota, and I can understand that, as he was not then holding public executive office. During the drought, time and time again the Federal Government gave money to the drought-stricken States. President Roosevelt sent men out to North Dakota and other States similarly situated when we were absolutely destitute and could not keep our schools open, and assisted in having the Government furnish us money. We were told, "All we want you to do is to show that you have done the best you could." Our legislature passed a 2-percent sales tax, and we raised our rates of income taxes. The superintendent of instruction of the State of North Dakota came to Washington and met with the appropriate Federal officials.

One of the reasons why Franklin Delano Roosevelt was so popular in North Dakota in 1936 among the young folks was that time and time again, until I believe the total reached nearly $1,000,000, money was given to the State of North Dakota to match what we had raised.

I want to tell my friend, the distinguished Senator from Montana, that I feel satisfied Federal money went to Montana under similar conditions. They could have it for the asking. So could South Dakota, and so could Nebraska, in case Nebraska needed it; and I am satisfied that it was needed in the western part of the State. It may be that Nebraska, which has such a wonderful record in handling its finances, did not need it, but it could have obtained it.

In my State, I believe 1,178 school districts were insolvent or partially so. Many could not pay their school teachers. The school teachers received warrants and cashed them at discounts all the way from 10 to 50 percent. In Sioux County they could not even sell them at 50-percent discount. In Stark County, N. Dak., near Dickenson, N. Dak., when we got the money from the income and sales taxes, coal was furnished to the school district but the State of North Dakota received a bill for 85 cents. The school district could not even buy a shovel with which to handle the coal which was furnished and we had to furnish the shovel.

Mr. President, I wish to tell my friend the able Senator from Montana something that is not at all new. A delegation from Washington came out to our part of the country, headed, I believe, by Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, who is still here. They went throughout the State, and throughout the drought-stricken area, and recommended that money be made available so that the schools of the various States in the drought-stricken area could be kept open—and also that our folks had work. I mention that so that the record may be kept clear. I believe that posterity is entitled to know exactly what President Roosevelt and the other Federal officials did in that great emergency.

In the entire State we produced only $32,000,000 worth of crops. For 4 years the railroads did not pay their taxes. The big corporations did not pay their taxes. The farmers were behind 5, 6, 7, 8, or 9 years, and could not pay their taxes. In that situation the Federal Government stepped in. I want everyone to know that as Governor of that State, and as a man born in North Dakota, I am eternally grateful to the Federal Government for seeing to it that the children of North Dakota at that time were kept in the schools and received their education. The teachers, the taxpayers, the State of North Dakota are overwhelming in favor of this bill and I shall support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend Lloyd Gressle, of St. John's Episcopal Church, of Sharon, Pa., formerly of St. James' Church, Wooster, Ohio, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who hast given us this good land for our heritage, grant us the grace and wisdom to read Thy hand writ large upon the pages of its history. Grant us the grace to look back that we may go forward with courage and confidence. Grant us never to forget Thy promise and Thy will, and grant in all things that we may consider the common man and He whose desires and will we seek to fulfill. Grant to our leaders in government sound minds and strong wills that they may fulfill those things which Thou hast promised that they shall in all things. We ask Thy blessings upon our land. Grant that this Government may go forward from strength to strength under Thy kindly will. Through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TRENTON DAM AND SWANSON LAKE

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 270) to change the name of Culbertson Dam on the Republican River in the State of Nebraska to "Trenton Dam," and to name the body of water arising behind such dam "Swanson Lake."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the dam under construction on the Republican River in the State of Nebraska, heretofore known, designated, and referred to as "Culbertson Dam," shall hereafter be designated and referred to as "Trenton Dam." Any law, regulation, document, or record of the United States in which such dam is designated or referred to under and by the name "Culbertson Dam" shall be held and considered to refer to such dam under and by the name of "Trenton Dam." The body of water arising behind such dam shall hereafter be designated and referred to as "Swanson Lake" in commemoration of Carl H. Swanson.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SEVENTY-FIFTH RUNNING OF THE KENTUCKY DERBY

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Speaker, surely the sun will shine on Saturday in old Kentucky. That day will make the seventy-fifth annual running of the greatest sports classic in America, the Kentucky Derby. One hundred thousand voices will join in the magic cry, "They're off," and 100,000 hearts will thrill to the hoofbeats of America's greatest thoroughbreds. It is always a great race and will be again this year, but one does not have to go to Kentucky to see a close race. We had one this week here on the floor of the House. The running in Kentucky may be the best, but we saw some pretty fancy running on the floor of the House in connection with labor legislation.

On Saturday at Churchill Downs, it may be Olympia by 10 lengths or it may be a photo finish between Kentucky Colonel and Palestinian. In any event, within 5 minutes after the end of the race, everyone will know who won and just what price the winner paid. In our race here on the floor of the House this week, no one knows just who won and no one knows just who owes what to whom.

Let me briefly review the happenings on the House floor during the Lesinski-Wood-Sims sweepstakes. A bill was brought to the House to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and reenact the Wagner Act with amendments. It was substantially amended. The House then accepted these amendments. In accepting these amendments, the House wrote a bill which made some 20 changes in the existing Taft-Hartley Act. These changes were made in response to just criticisms which labor leaders have made against the Taft-Hartley Act. An overwhelming majority of the Members of the House believes that changes to the Taft-Hartley law are in order. After this was done, the bill was sent back to committee and again we find ourselves once more at the starting gate, just exactly where we were 4 months ago when the Eighty-first Congress convened for its first session.

On Wednesday, we witnessed a strange demonstration on the floor of the House.

The majority were cheering and congratulating themselves on the excellent job done in sending the bill back to committee and thereby effectively killing amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act and preserving that act unchanged as the law of the land. Leaders of organized labor who were present in large numbers in the gallery joined in this applause. The motives and the methods of men are at times difficult to understand.

There is in the House of Representatives a small group on both sides of the aisle who are thoroughly satisfied with the Taft-Hartley Act as written. When the House worked its will on Wednesday, these Members could sit squarely by with satisfied smiles. Theirs was the victory. Those of us who want to see some changes made in the Taft-Hartley law may now have to wait for many months before we will again have an opportunity to make such an effort. As a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, I will do what I can to expedite the drafting of a new bill. I hope I may be given the opportunity to at least offer my ideas, which I think reflect the wishes of a majority of the men and women in my district. In the past, that privilege has been denied to 12 of the 25 members of the committee. If we are allowed to participate in drafting this legislation, it may have better luck when it next reaches the floor.

It is unfortunate not only that legislation in the field of labor-management relations has been delayed, but that other important legislation before the Committee on Education and Labor is also indefinitely postponed. What price victory.

THE LATE GEORGE GORDON BATTLE

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to pause for a moment to pay my respects to a great American and a dear friend of mine, George Gordon Battle, who passed away suddenly a few days ago on his way to his home in Orange County, Va.

George Gordon Battle was one of the foremost members of the New York bar, where he practiced law with distinction for a number of years. He was a man of a great heart and in spite of the fact that he enjoyed a large and lucrative law practice, he was never too busy to aid the underprivileged and the less fortunate with his advice and counsel. He took many a case to defend the poor without any thought of recompense and his gifts to charity were many and anonymous.

George Gordon Battle was a Democrat high in the circles of Tammany Hall in New York City, and he taught me one of my first lessons in politics. I remember well when I was relieved as a deputy police commissioner of New York City by an appointee of Tammany Hall that I was considerably upset and Gordon Battle said to me, "Don't let the disappointments of politics ever make you bitter." That was wise advice and I have tried my best to follow it.

The country has lost a fine citizen; the little people have lost a great friend; and, those of us who were fortunate enough to know him realize that a great soul has left us.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I knew Mr. Battle well, and practiced law with him and had many cases with him. I am deeply grieved to hear of his passing. He was a noble gentleman and a fine lawyer.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. AUCHINCLOSS] has expired.

PERMISSION TO FILE REPORTS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file several privileged reports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

QUO VADIS?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MORTON] a few moments ago undertook to compare these meandering or mental somersaults that we have witnessed here in the last few days in the House to a horse race in Kentucky.

I do not think there can be any such comparison. When I look around and see what has happened here from day to day, and compare the roll calls, I think it can be more reasonably compared to the Snake Railroad that was described in this House by Mr. Wingo, of Arkansas, many years ago, when he said:

> It wiggled in and wobbled out
> And left the people all in doubt,
> Whether in its zig-zag track
> It was going west or coming back.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JONES of Alabama asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include two articles on the subject of public housing.

THE DEBATE ON THE LABOR BILL

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi has just been comparing the actions of this House to a certain snake that wiggled in and wiggled out, so that one could not tell which way it was going. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi to check the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and check the voting record and see if he does not find something that is almost unparalleled in the history of this House. I found that every Democrat of the Missouri delegation—and we are all Democrats but one—voted exactly alike every time, and every one of us voted the same way during the entire consideration of the labor legislation before this House, and we voted right every time. Let me say to the gentleman from Mississippi that I am prouder of the action of the Democratic members of the Missouri delegation during this recent debate and voting than I have ever been of anything that has happened since I have been a Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ST. GEORGE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include two articles.

Mr. FARRINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in three separate instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

ANTI-POLL-TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I, too, was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi about going west and coming back. I wish to mention that at the moment we are holding hearings on the anti-poll-tax legislation in the Committee on House Administration. This bill will be brought to the floor one of these days very soon and I think the gentleman then will get a good view of his colleagues over on the other side who have been supporting him in the last few days. Having been going west at that time, they will be coming back this time.

MANAGEMENT-LABOR RELATIONSHIPS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I have been greatly interested in the colloquy that has taken place between various Members of the House this morning. I have been wondering that if business and labor working together and trying to get harmony did so like the Members of this House whether we would ever be able to accomplish anything that would be for the best interests of our country.

Could we accomplish anything in harmony if we proceeded like the House has during the past week in connection with consideration of labor legislation? Do you think labor and management would be able to get together and break bread together and really accomplish something? I doubt it very much. In my opinion, certain things that have happened in this House are about as bad, if not worse, than you will find in many of the controversies that we have between management and labor.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman give us the program for next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I intend to announce the program a little later. I should like to have this unanimous-consent request acted upon before the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a statement by radio station KFI and also certain tables.

Mr. KENNEDY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article.

AMERICA'S AGED CITIZENS BYPASSED

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, in the multitudinous duties crowding upon the Congress, are we not overlooking one of the most meritorious legislative proposals requiring immediate consideration? I refer to legislation providing for fair, equitable, and sufficient retirement annuities for the aged citizens of America who no longer are permitted or are able to participate in productive enterprise.

Soon after the Eighty-first Congress convened I introduced H. R. 2136, and our colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK] introduced H. R. 2135, a companion bill, known as the Townsend legislation. Other Members have introduced identical bills. The purpose of the bills is to provide our unemployed elderly citizens 60 years of age or over with adequate annuities for their maintenance and also to provide protection in certain cases to widows and their children and the disabled. The bill has been pending before the Ways and Means Committee since February 2, 1949. Recently extensive hearings were held before the Ways and Means Committee on the legislation, and many persons, including many of our colleagues, testified in support of it. Eighty-three Members of the House signed petitions to the Ways and Means Committee urging that the bill be reported out for consideration on the floor. The following Members signed such petitions:

JOHN A. BLATNIK, Eighth, Minnesota; HOMER D. ANGELL, Third, Oregon; FRED MARSHALL, Sixth, Minnesota; VICTOR WICKERSHAM, Seventh, Oklahoma; ROBERT T. SECREST, Fifteenth, Ohio; THOMAS S. Mr. Speaker, ex-President Hoover, Chairman of the Commission for Organization of the Executive Department on April 25, 1949, wrote to the Honorable ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, a letter on old-age security, which appears in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at page 2438, and from which I quote as follows:

The following notes relating to the systems existing at present are based upon data collected by the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch. That Commission did not deal with policy questions to be determined by Congress. The views on policy expressed herein, therefore, are solely my own.

I wish to say at once that I strongly favor governmental provision for protection of the aged and their dependents.

The problem before the Nation is to obtain a workable system, with a minimum of administrative cost, a minimum of bureaucracy, adjusted to the economic strength of the country, which gives an assurance of security to this group. In my view, we have not yet found that system.

I should like to make two general observations:

There is an illusion about the whole Federal old-age and survivors insurance. Because the taxes on pay rolls are paid into a trust fund and paid out without appropriation by Congress, there is an idea that these are neither taxes nor Federal expenditures. They are just as much a burden upon our national economy as any other tax or any other Government expenditure. Also, pay-roll taxes, however, justifiable, are, like all other taxes, a burden on the standard of living of the whole Nation. A considerable part of the pay-roll taxes paid by employers in the long run is passed to the people as a whole in prices, and a considerable part of the taxes paid by wage earners is passed on by demands for increased wages.

THE PRESENT SYSTEM

1. The old-age problem has been thrust upon the Federal Government largely by the great increase in longevity. Its dimensions are indicated by the fact that there will be by 1950 about 11,000,000 persons over 65 years of age. They will increase in numbers absolutely and relatively, both with the increase in population and with the constantly advancing protections to health.

2. The Nation today is undertaking to solve the problem from three different directions:

First is the joint Federal-State assistance to which I shall refer as "State systems." Forty-eight of the States and three other jurisdictions, with Federal aid, give old-age assistance, dependency, children's benefits, and other social services, based upon individual needs. The variations in the needs requirement are considerable, and in a few States are so liberally interpreted as to be practically universal old-age pensions. The total number of persons given assistance by the State systems is about 2,300,000.

The average amount of payments to the aged in need in all 48 States is $42.02 per month per person. In the 46 most typical States based on need, the average payment is about $39.50 per month per person. These monthly payments vary greatly among the States—ranging from a low of about $20 to a high of about $78 a month in one State. The annual cost averages about $1,200,000,000—about one-half of which is paid by the States and about one-half by the Federal Government.

Second is the Federal old-age and survivors insurance, based upon pay-roll taxes, to which I shall refer as the "Federal insurance system." Benefits are now being paid out to about 2,260,000 persons at an annual cost of about $556,000,000, and averaging about $25 per person per month, including their dependents. The payments being insufficient for the needy, many must be supplemented by the State systems.

Third is a multitude of old-age pension and retirement systems in the country to which I shall refer as the "independent systems." They are in the main Federal veteran and military pensions and disability systems of this group which extend into the 65-year-age group: Federal civil-service retirement systems; the Railroad Retirement System; the old-age or retirement systems of the States and local governments; the old-age or retirement systems of universities, hospitals, fraternal organizations and other benevolent institutions, insurance companies, businesses, and industries. There is now a new form of old-age and retirement system emerging in particular industries as the result of collective bargaining. These systems, together with pensions to veterans, bid fair to be further extended.

The number of persons now receiving pensions or aid from these independent services is estimated at about 2,300,000. The monthly payments under these systems are much higher, on the average, than the other two systems.

Theoretically, there are about 7,000,000 persons now receiving benefits from all three systems. This, however, includes dependents less than 65 years old and there are duplications because in many cases the benefits from the Federal insurance system are inadequate and must be supplemented by the State systems.

FAULTS IN THE PRESENT FEDERAL INSURANCE SYSTEM

3. There are serious faults in the Federal insurance system.

(a) The original concepts, as embodied in the Social Security Act of 1935, were that the money to pay for the benefits would come from employees and employers by a tax on pay rolls, and that the system would be self-sustaining. The original actuarial basis of the system was faulty and was made worse by the legislation of 1939.

One of the methods of this system contemplated building up a reserve fund in the early years to compensate the subsequent increased benefits. The moneys collected from the pay rolls have been, and are at present, in excess of the payments to beneficiaries, and the trust fund of about $10,000,000,000 has been accumulated and invested in Government bonds. The growth of expenditures for benefits under the present act apparently will exhaust this reserve in from 5 to 10 years, and the general taxpayer will be forced to make up the annual deficit. This deficit, it is estimated, will rise ultimately to about $1,700,000,000 per annum.

(b) An additional burden, however, is thrust on the general taxpayer. Under the present system the Federal Government has used the surplus income of the trust fund (amounting to the $10,000,000,000) for its current expenses and placed its IOU (in the shape of Government bonds) in the trust fund for the money thus used. It is estimated that the benefits paid out will begin to exceed the receipts (upon the present basis of the pay-roll tax and benefits) in a few years. When this occurs, the Government must redeem its IOU's from the trust fund. The money to redeem them must come from the general taxpayer. Even if the bonds were sold to the public, ultimately they must be redeemed by the taxpayer. As those who have already paid the pay-roll deductions are also taxpayers, they will, to some extent, be paying for their insurance twice over.

I cannot agree with the economic arguments before your committee which are to the contrary. The simple fact is that the money has been raised by a tax, and except for benefits already paid, has been used as current expenditures by the Government, and must be replaced from somewhere—the taxpayer.

THE PROPOSED NEW LEGISLATION

4. I do not have the technical staff to analyze in detail the effect of the amendments to previous legislation implied in these two bills (H. R. 2893 and 2892). However, I make some over-all observations which may be worthy of consideration by your committee.

(a) I suggest that the committee consider abandoning the whole reserve fund concept and that the Federal Insurance System be put on a pay-as-you-go basis. It should be no more difficult to calculate for a year ahead the amount of pay-roll taxes required to meet the outgo than any other taxes. The present reserve fund of $10,000,000,000 could remain as a balance wheel. It could be drawn upon temporarily when advance calculations of the tax prove inadequate and then could be restored the following year. This procedure would enable the Congress to fix the tax as needed and to appropriate the budget annually. In the latter matter, it has no voice at all at present. Such a method of pay and collect as you go would avoid the faults pointed out in the paragraphs 3 (a) and (b) above.

I am aware it will be contended that this course would deprive the scheme of its purported actuarial basis. As a matter of fact, it has been abandoned under the present system. But more important, the basic fault of double payment by beneficiaries (3 (b) above) destroys all such actuarial contentions anyway. And the same situation will apply to the new legislation as it again proposes to increase reserves, and spend the increased money for current expenses of the Government, with ultimate replacement by the taxpayer.

SEARCH FOR A SIMPLER SYSTEM

6. The committee, in my opinion, should undertake to establish an independent research body to provide analyses of other possible systems. It should be given a year for study.

The reasons are:

(a) On the organizational side both the State systems and the Federal insurance system maintain expensive administrations of the same general problem. The administrative cost of the Federal insurance system is likely, under this bill, to rise eventually to over $100,000,000 per annum. The independent systems do not overlap so extensively in the administration field, and usually are managed more economically.

(b) In the financial support of these three systems the overlap is very great. Many of the independent systems and the Federal insurance system are based upon pay-roll contributions, and thus many contributors are in both systems, are being twice insured, and will receive benefits from both systems. The people do not need to be provided for twice over, and where they are in both systems their deduction burdens are very great and a menace to their families' standard of living.

(c) It is obvious that the State systems must be maintained for many years to come. It would be many, many years before complete and adequate coverage and benefits could be attained by the Federal insurance system. Its benefits, even under the new bill, are inadequate in many instances, and must, in any event, be supplemented by the State systems based upon need.

(d) A careful inquiry might disclose an entirely different system which would avoid the huge costs of administration and the duplication, which would substitute some other form of taxation, more simple and more direct for its support, and which would give more positive security to the aged than this complicated system.

It is worth looking into.

Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of Mr. Hoover are of great interest and particularly applicable to the discussion of H. R. 2135 and H. R. 2136. Mr. Hoover calls attention to the difficulties and inefficiencies in our present system of social security for the aged of America, and in the concluding excerpt from his letter which I have quoted suggests that an entirely different system should be considered on a pay-as-you-go basis, which would avoid the huge costs of administration, avoid duplication, and would substitute some other form of taxation more simple and more direct for its support and which would give more positive security to the aged than the complicated system we now have, which would also obviate the existing indefensible trust fund. The legislation we propose, in our opinion, would meet these objectives.

Mr. Speaker, our plan—H. R. 2136—meets these objections and is a self-financing noncontributory retirement system under which beneficiaries will receive annuities as a matter of right without reference to charity or prior contributions. It is Nation-wide and covers all citizens 60 years of age or over. It is a pay-as-you-go system. Annuities will be paid currently out of currently raised revenues. Sums received by annuitants must be spent within 30 days. The existing system of old-age and survivors insurance and old-age assistance is abolished, together with the pay-roll tax for financing old-age and survivors insurance.

Annuities should be offered with neither the stigma of charity nor the aroma of poverty. They should be offered as a matter of right as dividends from the national wealth the aged have helped to create. The system should be one to replace the complicated, arbitrary, and inequitable provisions of the existing law. It should be one which will have a stimulative effect upon our economy and one which will help to make available jobs to all the young who will replace the aged as the latter move into retirement at a decent standard of living.

Only noncontributory pensions will meet the needs of those now grown old who are in need because of past neglect in providing an adequate contributory retirement system. Since at the time the system was adopted most of the States were financially unable to assume the burden of so many aged who moved from State to State and on to Federal relief rolls, it was deemed proper to continue to provide Federal aid to States to provide relief to those aged who were in need.

Much of the argument in support of our plan stems from the limited coverage and inadequate benefits of the present system. For example, most of today's aged who are not working left the labor force before they could build up rights to benefits under OASI. And even among the young and still employed, under the present OASI system, there is no coverage for jobs in agriculture, domestic service in private homes, Federal, State, and local government employees, and workers in religious, charitable, and certain other nonprofit organizations, the self-employed, and others as well. About one-third of the workers engaged in employment are not covered by the system; and of the 78,700,000 living persons with OASI wage credits at the end of 1948, about 40,500,000 were neither fully nor currently insured on the basis of their wage records, and hence were not protected under the programs. In the Federal Security Agency, Social Security Administration, Annual Report, 1947, section 1, pages 7, 18, 39, it is said:

Under our present provisions it would be possible for an individual to work at some time during the course of his working life in jobs covered by Federal old-age and survivors' insurance, the Railroad Retirement Act, the Civil Service Retirement Act, and the retirement plan of a State or locality. According to the length and timing of such employments, he might become eligible to receive retirement benefits under one or more or all of these plans. Another man, with similar earnings under several of the programs, may go through a working life without ever acquiring retirement rights under any. Conceivably the survivors of a worker who dies might be eligible for benefits under a Federal old-age and survivors' insurance system as well as under a State workmen's compensation law and under general veterans' legislation. Another family, equally in need of income to replace the father's earnings, may have had no opportunity to gain protection under any of these programs.

No Federal provision is made to care for the disabled other than the needy blind. In the same report, pages 21 and 22, it is said:

The United States is unique among major industrial nations in its lack of a general disability insurance system. Compensation for wage loss due to incapacity is confined in this country to work-connected accidents or diseases in industry and commerce, to service in the armed forces, and to employment in the railroad industry or by government. Two States provide benefits for temporary disability under arrangements similar to unemployment insurance and with the same coverage. In June 1947 these special systems, in the aggregate, reached very few of the 2,000,000 to 2,500,000 persons disabled on an average day and recently in the labor force, who but for their incapacity would be working or seeking work.

The Social Security Administration in this report, pages 1 to 63, concedes the limitations of the present law and strongly urges extension of coverage. The present law was and continues to be considered simply as a cornerstone of a structure which was to be expanded.

Under the existing law under old-age and survivors insurance the average benefits are $25.28 per month, according to the latest data available from social-security records. To obtain this payment the worker and the employer would have to make contributions over a long period of time. On the other hand, the average of old-age assistance—not available to those under the retirement plan but given only on a claim of need—was some $16 more per month than the old-age and survivors insurance payments. According to late figures, payments in Colorado reached $78.29; in California, $61.25; in Washington, $60.33. It is thus shown that those receiving assistance who did not contribute to the program received very substantially more than those who through the years contributed taxes based on monthly incomes.

It is reported that recipients of relief now exceed by nearly 1,500,000 the insured workers who are drawing benefits. In the month of October last the number granted cash on the basis of need totaled 2,469,372 as against 1,016,303 retired workers receiving old-age insurance. This experience is directly opposite to that contemplated when the Social Security Act was enacted. It was believed that gradually all old-age beneficiaries would come under the provisions of the old-age and survivors insurance program and those receiving assistance on the basis of need would be gradually reduced and eventually eliminated.

A major defect in the present system is the smallness of individual payments, and their inadequacy in providing a decent standard of living. As one of our colleagues has said, the old-age insurance program is allegedly based, in respect to the payments to the recipients, upon the contributions made by the workers, the employees, and their employers. A vast actuarial scheme has been set up, requiring the attention and deliberation of highly trained actuaries. Great shelves are being filled with volumes of statistics, weighted averages, median lines, maximums, minimums, involved and intricate forms. At the end, what happens? At the end, the average worker comes out with about $25 a month, far less than he would get if he were under the old-age assistance program. This plan actually contemplates that these actuarial calculations will become effective against a boy 16 years of age who is in a covered occupation, and that for 50 years, until he is 65 years of age, the Social Security Board will keep track of his employers and of the tax payments made from his wages; also of his wife, his children, his job, and his compensation; and then, as a result of those calculations, it will determine what that young man will receive 50 years from now. In other words, these actuarial calculators are now calculating whether 50 years from now that boy will get $10.50, or $19, or $20. In the next 10 or 20 years we are going to have crisis after crisis; what these crises may be, no one can readily predict; but certain it is that many of them will bring widespread economic dislocation. And here is a group of men who solemnly assert that by means of this actuarial system they are at this time determining how much workers will be paid 10 to 20 to 50 or even 100 years from now. The sad and pathetic aspect of it is that these payments will amount to only approximately $10 a month, which is the minimum, or up to approximately $60 a month, which is the maximum. As a matter of fact, these payments are so meager and so low that they nauseate and sicken the human heart.

Mr. Speaker, the great objection to the public-assistance programs is that, being State administered, amounts paid vary greatly not only as between States but also as between localities within the same State. So far as our proposal is concerned, none of the foregoing would present a problem, but the proposal would have some problems of its own to be worked out. Some of the foregoing points I will now consider in further detail.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue is to collect the tax under the proposed plan. Every person having a personal income in excess of $250 and all other persons or corporations having any gross receipts would be required to make monthly returns. Much of this work of collection could be eliminated if some method of collection at the source were devised. Another administrative problem would be the sending out of the checks each month to the pensioners. A similar problem is now being met under the Social Security Act.

Under old-age and survivors insurance, the Social Security Administration, in the Federal Security Agency, administers the payment of benefits, while the Bureau of Internal Revenue collects the tax. The cost of administering this program is now running around $50,000,000 per year. Total costs through 1947 were about 15 percent of benefits paid out and a little more than 2 percent of total receipts, taxes plus interest on assets. For the fiscal year 1947, administrative costs were 2.5 percent of receipts and 9.6 percent of benefit payments. Part of the administrative chore is keeping the wage records of 78,700,000 living persons and determining the amount of benefit each—and his family—is entitled to if and when he or they become eligible for a benefit payment.

Though old-age and other public-assistance plans are State administered, the Federal Government contributes to the administrative costs. The contribution is 5 percent of the grant for old-age assistance and one-half the cost of administering aid to dependent children and the blind. The total Federal and State administrative costs in the fiscal year 1947 ran approximately as follows: Old-age assistance, $50,026,000; dependent children, $21,289,000; needy blind, $2,396,000. The costs ran higher for the year 1948 but the break-down is not yet available.

Proponents of our plan believe that the economy of the Nation will benefit by reason of the expenditure of the annuity within 30 days after its receipt. According to the bill—

(a) The annuity shall be spent within the confines of the United States, its Territories, and possessions.

(b) Each installment of the annuity shall be spent by the annuitant within 30 days after the time of its receipt.

(c) An annuitant shall not engage in any occupation, business, or other activity from which a profit, wage, or other compensation is realized or attempted, except that nothing in this title shall be construed to prohibit an annuitant from collecting interest, rents, or other revenues from his own investments. No annuitant shall support an able-bodied person in idleness except a spouse. * * *

(e) Any sum received by an annuitant which represents the proceeds of a sale of any real property acquired through the use of money received as an annuity under this title shall be expended by the annuitant within 6 months after the receipt of such proceeds of such a sale.

Mr. Speaker, there will be no incentive for elderly people of limited income to hoard their meager earnings as the haunting fear of old age and destitution will have been removed. The proceeds of the tax will go to people who will move out of employment. They will be required to spend the proceeds of their annuities within 30 days. This will stimulate production, production will promote employment, the younger will move into jobs vacated by the aged, and we will have prosperity.

The old-age and survivors insurance program, being a contributory plan based upon contributions by both employers and employees, each paying a tax of 1 percent of the first $3,000 of wages, to be increased to 1½ percent in 1950–51 and 2 percent thereafter, is, in effect, a tax on production and a burden on all citizens. The plan gives inadequate relief to those covered and is unjust to those not covered. These taxes go into what is called a trust fund which, on December 31, 1948, amounted to $10,721,714,000. The Government spends the trust funds as received for the regular expenses of government and replaces the funds with Government securities bearing interest paid by the Government, which encourages deficit spending. It follows that when these funds are needed, in lieu of the bonds, the Government will be obliged to levy another tax on all taxpayers to meet the demands upon the fund. Notwithstanding this huge balance in the trust fund on December 31, 1948, there had been paid to beneficiaries under the program up to that date only $2,328,606,000. The cost of administering this program is now running approximately $50,000,000 a year. For the fiscal year 1948 administrative costs were 10.8 percent of the benefit payments. A major part of the heavy administrative work is in keeping the wage records of 78,700,000 living people and determining the amount of benefits each—including his family—is entitled to if and when he becomes eligible for benefit payments. To be fully insured for life a worker must have 40 calendar quarters of covered employment. Minimum benefits for a worker are $10 a month, and for a worker and his wife, $15. Maximum benefits currently paid are $45.20 for a worker and $67.80 for a worker and his wife. The average payments as of December 1948 were $25.40 for a worker and $38.10 for a man and his wife. This old-age and survivors insurance plan contemplates these actuarial calculations would become effective for a boy 16 years of age in a covered occupation and that for 50 years, or until he is 65 years of age, the Social Security Board will keep track of his employer's and his tax payments made from his wages and other essential data covering the case, and based thereon will determine what he will receive in benefits 50 years from now which, according to present average payments, would be about $25 a month. With the ups and downs in the economic conditions of our Nation and the fluctuation in the value of the dollar, it is at once apparent that the whole scheme is unworkable and, in fact, offers little social security to our workers. These workers, who, with their employers, have been taxed through the years and who are now receiving only an average payment of $25 a month, are receiving less than many of the old-age beneficiaries who pay no tax to the fund. In the meantime the Federal Government is piling up a huge so-called reserve fund which, in reality, is only a paper fund, as the actual moneys are expended as received by Government bureaus and only I O U's are left in the fund.

All of these difficulties would be avoided by the enactment of legislation of the type we propose in H. R. 2135 and H. R. 2136, which, as I have said, is a pay-as-you-go plan and is financed from current receipts, to which all contribute who come within the tax formula. Particularly, it would eliminate the unsound reserve fund, the bureaucratic spenders' paradise for inflation and deficit spending. Furthermore, our proposal would be elastic, so that monthly annuities necessary to enable a recipient to maintain himself in decency and health would be determined currently, based on existing conditions and tax revenues collected, and which would be adequate to meet necessary living expenses.

The old-age assistance program under the present social-security law is also wholly inadequate to provide a decent annuity to old people of our Nation who come within its provisions. It is a starvation allowance. There is little uniformity in the payments made in the several States. Many old-age annuitants are suffering from malnutrition and starvation. In my own home city this news item appeared:

OLD-AGE PENSIONER FOUND CRITICALLY ILL

Leonard Dow, 79, Lind Hotel, old-age pensioner who was found seriously ill in his room Friday, was taken to the emergency hospital. Attendants said he is suffering from pneumonia and malnutrition. He later was admitted to Permanente Hospital, where his condition is reported critical. Dow is the third elderly person found this week in need.

Mr. Speaker, if we are to preserve the American way of life and our economic and democratic processes under free enterprise, we must find a solution not only for our unemployment problems but also for the problems of providing adequate care for the aged and disabled. With an accelerating advance in technology in the postwar era, and with the commercial development of atomic energy presaging more rapid transitions in mass production, the social risks and hazards of unemployment and old age are increased. Rather than see workers pushed from active labor force, hit or miss, the logical policy to follow is one of selection. The older group has earned retirement. Many of them are not covered by the Social Security Act. By covering the entire group, the whole process of business activity will be stabilized. Retirement payments will provide continuous buying power, will provide the needed balance in market demand, and will help to provide mass consumption without which our mass-production economy cannot function successfully. It will lead the way to greater prosperity in our Nation.

It was by reason of these deficiencies in the old-age security program that those of us in the Congress interested in the problem introduced the legislation which is embodied in H. R. 2135 and H. R. 2136. The aged, through no fault of their own, through the fiat of industry, are denied a part in production. They toiled the longest in production and should not, when old, be deprived of taking part in consumption. They are the victims of an industrial system for which they are not responsible. Society owes a duty to these old folks, and it can only perform this duty by establishing a national annuity system providing against the hazards of old age and disability. There are now millions among us, 60 years of age and over, who are not now being cared for in an honorable and just way by the present system of social security, and are receiving no support from any source or hopelessly inadequate support. Our plan would replace the complicated, arbitrary, and inequitable provisions of the existing law. It is financed by a gross income tax in which all participate. It is a pay-as-you-go system, and annuities will be paid currently each month out of currently raised revenues, and the sums so received by annuitants must be spent within 30 days. Under the plan the existing system of old-age and survivors insurance and old-age assistance will be abolished and a new program substituted therefor. This proposal gives recognition to the past labors of the aged and would offer them dividends from the wealth of American industry which they helped to create. These annuities are provided for those self-respecting American citizens as a matter of right, without reference to need or prior contributions, and with neither the stigma of charity nor the aroma of poverty.

Mr. Speaker, I most sincerely and respectfully urge that every Member of the House of Representatives give careful consideration to this legislation to afford security for our elderly citizens so that we may provide a Nation-wide Federal program which will deal justly with these forgotten elderly citizens so that they may spend their declining days without the fear of want and destitution. I urge you, my colleagues, to call upon the Ways and Means Committee to report out this legislation, so it may be enacted into law now.

VIRGIN ISLANDS CORPORATION

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2989) to incorporate the Virgin Islands Corporation, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2989, with Mr. MILLS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose yesterday the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] had been recognized for 10 minutes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman at this time.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, yesterday when the Committee rose I had been granted 10 minutes to discuss the various phases of the pending legislation which sets up a Virgin Islands Corporation. I pointed out at that time that I should like to briefly review some of the things relative to the history of the Virgin Islands.

We bought those islands from Denmark in 1914 for $25,000,000.

In 1934, during the unemployment period, it was necessary to set up a relief program in the Virgin Islands. That was done through the Virgin Islands Company, which has been operating since that time. It was set up for the purpose of trying to rehabilitate the islands. During those 15 years they have been engaged in that purpose. I leave it to you to say if that has been done.

Now we have a bill before us that proposes to set up a Virgin Islands Corporation with power to borrow up to $9,000,000 from the Federal Treasury to continue the work of trying to rehabilitate the Virgin Islands. Yesterday there was some question brought up relative to the people of the Virgin Islands being willing to work. You will remember that in the latter part of 1947 and the early part of 1948 two Senate committees and myself went down and we investigated all of the economic conditions in the Virgin Islands. One paragraph of the report that was accepted by the House at that time reads as follows:

> One of the most disturbing situations is the apparent unwillingness of Virgin Islanders to perform menial labor. This was reported to us by many people, both in business and government. We were informed that on St. Thomas most of the house servants, hotel workers, and those required to do the dirtiest and hardest labor were immigrants from the British West Indies. A small spot-check of our own indicated this to be true. Tortolans and others have sought to enter the Virgin Islands because of the demand for their services. Until recent years this immigration was winked at by United States authorities. At the present time it has been discontinued. We have on file several letters stating that, while a certain amount of unemployment and relief work exists in the city, it is next to impossible to obtain farm labor. The proposal has been made that workers from the British West Indies be allowed to come to the Virgin Islands for 3 or 4 months each year in order to get crops planted and harvested. It does not seem that this suggestion should be followed so long as there are Virgin Islanders available for and needing work, regardless of their desire to avoid it. As previously mentioned, a part of their unwillingness to work may be traced to climate and part to malnutrition. The latter factor is one point on the vicious circle whereby failure to work produces poverty and poverty produces malnutrition. In full justice it must be mentioned, however, that there is not always the opportunity for gainful employment which the islanders would wish.

In this bill we propose to set up a corporation to continue the same work that they have been doing for the past 15 years. They raise some sugarcane in the islands. It is high-cost production. This gives employment to about 600 people the year round and about 600 others during the harvesting season and the grinding of cane. They also get some cane from 550 small farmers who provide about 40 percent of the tonnage of cane. The Virgin Islands have also been operating a distillery, producing rum. They give employment to about 35 people during the peak season. The report goes on to say that the amount of sugarcane that they produce varies from 2,900 tons, which they hope to increase to 5,500 tons this year. But, it says that the cost of cane production is very high; it is a costly production. The molasses that they use for rum does not necessarily come from the Virgin Islands; it generally comes over from Puerto Rico. So, they have a very high cost of production so far as rum is concerned. The rum has been a drug on the market and it is necessary to have tie-in sales. I think the Members of the Congress ought to know that they and their constituents are in the rum business and have been, and if this corporation goes into effect, they will continue to be in the rum business.

Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman was also the author of a report, and as I read the report it states:

> It should be the purpose of the Federal Government to encourage local industries by loans and other measures rather than merely to provide work-relief projects.
> If private capital is lacking, the Government, through the Virgin Islands Company, might well make a substantial investment in this field.
> As in the development of the tourist trade, we recommend that the Government, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or indirectly through the Virgin Islands Company, provide loans for the establishment and maintenance of small industries.

Has the gentleman changed his mind since he made that report?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. No. I think it may be necessary, but I will tell the gentleman that the bill provides on page 2 for the encouragement of private capital for all of the activities of the Virgin Islands.

Then I would tell the gentleman to turn to page 5, where the bill provides that the corporation we are about to set up may have power "to acquire, in any lawful manner, any property—real, personal, or mixed, tangible or intangible—to hold, maintain, use, and operate the same; and to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of the same, whenever any of the foregoing transactions are deemed necessary or appropriate to the conduct of the activities authorized by this act, and on such terms as may be prescribed by the Corporation."

So I say to the gentleman that you cannot expect private industry to come in with private capital and set up a hotel or go into the business of farming or any other business in the islands, and then have the Government coming in and doing the same thing in competition with private business. The Government either ought to go into it all the way, which we are going to do in this bill, or encourage private business to go in and build hotels, tourist parks, go into farming, and so forth. They are not doing it now. They will not do it if the Government goes in in competition with the individual.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is there any other way the gentleman can think of that private industry could be started in the islands without the help of Federal funds?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Now you can get Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans in the islands, but they will not do that under this bill. Besides this amount of money we are making available to the islands, the Seventy-eighth Congress made $10,000,000 available for reconstruction in the islands, for the building of sewers. The gentleman knows they built some 3 miles of sewers in two towns in the Island of St. Croix. They have 83 houses hooked up, but 50 of those houses are Government houses. In other words, we are setting up an economy in the Virgin Islands that the people themselves do not want and cannot support.

The thing we ought to do is encourage these people to go in and do the things for themselves. We should not be doing things for them that they cannot or will not do for themselves. They will not do it.

Most of this money is to be spent on the Island of St. Croix, where there are about 600 people employed, and we are asking for $9,000,000 loan power, or about $8,000 per person. I think it is too much. At the proper time, I am going to offer an amendment to reduce the amount and try to restrict some of their activities.

I realize there is a problem in the Virgin Islands. These people need some help, but this will not rehabilitate the islands any more than we have done since 1934. It has been a losing operation all the time, partly because the people will not go to work. As I said yesterday nothing will be of much avail unless the island people themselves, with their own hands, their own money, and their own energy, attempt to do something for these industries. The living standards of the islands cannot be supported by their economy. It is nice to have paved streets and automobiles and sewers, but if you cannot support them, then the approach of this Government has been all wrong.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Has it not been a fact that since 1934, when the Virgin Islands Company was formed, it has been operated by the Federal Government, and no individual will go in there and do anything because he cannot compete with the Federal Government? He does not know what the Federal Government is going to do next with that corporation. Therefore, we are preventing private enterprise from trying to do anything in the Virgin Islands.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. That is right. I want the Members of the House to understand what they are going to vote upon. I do not believe you can encourage private industry to go in and set the Government up in competition with private industry. It just does not work.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Florida for his kindness. I ask the indulgence of the Committee to say a few words out of order.

Mr. Chairman, since the conclusion of hostilities of the last war, the United States Marine Corps has been at work perfecting new landing techniques and the equipment essential to such operations. These new developments will be put on display for Members of Congress and their wives on next Monday, when the commandant of the Marine Corps and the staff of Marine Corps schools at Quantico, Va., will play host to Members of Congress and their wives.

Unfortunately, two postponements have been necessitated by prolonged House debate on labor-management relations but it is hoped that all who accepted the previous invitation will be able to arrange their schedule to permit attendance at the demonstration on next Monday.

Transportation to and from Washington will be provided and arrangements have been perfected for the delivery of telephone calls and other messages to Members at the demonstration.

The attack on a fortified position utilizing close air support will demonstrate dramatically the peculiar problems inherent in such an operation and all Members of the House are cordially invited to attend.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I have been in Congress ever since we incorporated the Virgin Islands Company in 1934, with the exception of 2 years. Every year since 1934 then we have been appropriating money for the operation of the Virgin Islands Company and trying to look after the people of the Virgin Islands. The corporation was composed of three directors, the former President of the United States, Secretary Ickes, and another member of the Department of Interior. Every year they have come here asking for additional funds amounting to thousands and thousands of dollars for these islands. It has been nothing but an item of expense. If, from 1934 to 1949, this corporation cannot be run without an annual request for funds to operate it, do you not think and do you not have reason enough to know that the thing is not working? How many more years do you need to determine in your own minds that a corporation loss is not functioning properly? It seems to me it is just about the most foolish thing that a Congressman can do, to think that they have to have 15 or 20 years to determine whether a thing is working or not. You know the Virgin Islands Company is not working, and so do I know it. Let us stop our fooling and let us try to do something that will be of benefit for the Virgin Islands. That is the first thing. Secondly, for goodness' sake, let us get the people of America out of the rum business. There are millions of people back in all of our districts who do not want to be in the rum business, and yet you Members of Congress vote every year to keep them in the business. I think it is wrong. I wish that every church member in your district would go out and fight every one of you who is going to vote for this legislation, because you know that they do not want it, and you are only sticking them in the rum business every time you vote to continue this corporation. I think it is a shame. I know that there are people in my district who do not want to be in the rum business, and I am not going to be the one who is going to vote them into the rum business. That is what you are doing when you vote for this legislation. It is time to stop and the quicker you learn that the better off you will be. I hope that the people back home will recognize the fact that you Members who are in favor of this corporation are only working to keep them in the rum business. Every citizen in your district and every citizen in this country is a stockholder, or at least a part owner in the operation of the rum business. Anybody who wants to get in the rum business can do so. I do not care about that. That is their business. But I do not want anyone to be sticking me in the rum business, because I just want to get out of it. As a citizen of the United States, along with other citizens, I have been in this business too long by virtue of the Virgin Islands Company, and I want to get out of it. This is my opportunity to try to relieve myself of the obligation. I want you Members to stop voting me and every other citizen into the rum business.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The gentleman might be interested to know that it is a very uneconomical operation. They bring the molasses from Puerto Rico. They do not raise enough cane to produce the molasses for the rum factory on the island of St. Thomas. So we lose money on it every year, besides being in the rum business.

Mr. RICH. You have lost money on that rum business for years. I had a bottle of Virgin Islands Government House rum. I had a bottle of it here one day and I had my picture taken; it was sent all over the country. I do not want any more people telling me I have been in the rum business. Some of my people do not like it. Nor do I.

Mr. RIVERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. RIVERS. They must think the Virgins are rumdums.

Mr. RICH. The Virgins are rumdums, because you are keeping them in the rum business and they do not want that business over there in the Virgin Islands.

As the gentleman from Nebraska said, there are 600 people in the Virgin Islands employed in this business. Sometimes you get as many as 1,200 out of 25,000. That business is uneconomical, it is unsound, it is unethical. It is not good business for you and it is not good business for me. They say, "Why does not private enterprise do something over there?" Nobody will go over there and try to do business in competition with Uncle Sam, because nobody knows what Uncle Sam is going to do to them. That is because you Members are voting to keep this Corporation in operation. Now you are going to give $9,000,000. That is at the rate of seven or eight thousand dollars for every man, woman, and child on the Virgin Islands. That is just too much money. Where are you going to get the money?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has expired.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman from Michigan give me some time?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to yield the gentleman 5 minutes, but I would like to have him yield for a question.

Mr. RICH. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Michigan if I get the time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania five additional minutes.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. My question is this: Is the gentleman a member of the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. RICH. No, I am not. If I were you would not get a nickel.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the gentleman made the statement that every year appropriations have been made for the Virgin Islands Company. I know the gentleman is truthful. I know he wants to be correct. But I will have to challenge that statement.

Mr. RICH. Well, if you do not give it to the Virgin Islands Company you are giving it to the people on the Virgin Islands, giving it to the municipalities on the islands.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not for the operation of this Company.

Mr. RICH. Do you mean to tell me that we have not been appropriating thousands and thousands of dollars every year for the Virgin Islands?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not for the operation of this Company.

Mr. RICH. Well, you have been trying to take care of the people over there in the operation of their government. You heard the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] say a while ago that there are more lazy people over there who will not do anything, than anywhere in the country. I am sick and tired of trying to take care of anybody, whether in America or the Virgin Islands, who will not do anything to earn his own living. It is about time that we took those sitters off of the Government pay roll. It is time for people to get out and work and earn and save and try to support the Government. The Government does not owe anybody a living if they do not work for it, unless they are too old to work or sick or crippled. We want to take care of those people but we do not want to take care of able-bodied people, able to take care of themselves. I do not want to take care of any more loafers.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is one of the most astute businessmen in the House. He knows business language. He knows corporate procedure. He knows what balance sheets and operating statements are. He knows that appropriations made to run the political affairs of a country have nothing to do with appropriations to make up deficits caused by operating losses of an industrial concern.

Mr. RICH. I thank the gentleman for the compliment, but I still want to say that the way we are operating the Virgin Islands is all wrong. I want the gentleman from Michigan and the members of this committee to get me out of the rum business, and the sooner you do it the better. There are thousands of people in my district who think the same way. I am speaking for them. I say it is a stench on the American people to force them into a business they do not want to be in. If I want to invest in the rum business, that is my money, but if my constituents want to get out of the rum business it is my business to help get them out.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The RECORD of Congress will show that the Virgin Islands Company got $500,000 last year for operation.

Every year the St. Thomas City Council or some representative of the government of the islands has been before the Committee on Appropriations seeking aid, and money has been appropriated not for the Company but for some phase of relief in the Virgin Islands, in order for them to carry on their economy. Besides that, we authorized in the Seventy-eighth Congress $10,000,000, of which $4,000,000 has already been appropriated to rehabilitate the islands.

Mr. RICH. That is right. I realize that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], is one of the best businessmen in the House. I admire him, but I do not like for him or anybody else to put me into the rum business.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. REDDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman if he has been devoting as much time and energy trying to get his own State of Pennsylvania out of the liquor business? They have been in it for quite a while.

Mr. RICH. The liquor business has been legalized in Pennsylvania. Whatever the people do within the limits of the law is all right with me; if a citizen of Pennsylvania wants to get in the liquor business under the laws of the Federal Government that is his business and he has a right to do it, under the law of the State of Pennsylvania or any other State. But here is a case where you are putting Uncle Sam into the liquor business, into the rum business. Goodness gracious. What is the difference? Why! All the difference in the world. It is a matter of principle with me, a matter of principle, trying to operate those islands down there; and I would not compromise on principle with anybody. I think it is about time you men recognized that fact.

Mr. REDDEN. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], in his statement of high respect for the views and business experience of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I would remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania, however, that we are not here putting the Government into the rum business down in the Virgin Islands; it has been in that business for the past 14 years. It is a question of taking the Government out of the rum business with this money that is appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. RICH. Yes; you have been losing money every year in the rum business. You have been turning out rum in tremendous quantities, putting it in bottles and selling it to the American people, for you have not any other place to sell it. Those who drink rum tell me it is not very good rum.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I agree with those who say that we have a problem in the Virgin Islands which should be corrected. I have my serious doubt of the advisability of setting up a corporation of this nature, over which we place seven commissioners who are purely political appointees, to control with almost complete autocratic power the economy of a segment of our country; it is something that should cause us all to ponder. We remember a few years ago we had a governor down there who was doing his level best under every kind of adverse circumstance to help the people of the Virgin Islands, but he had a lieutenant governor who was doing everything he could do to socialize and communize the people of the Virgin Islands; that gentleman's name was Robert Morss Lovett of the Watson-Dodd-Lovett trio. Mr. Lovett admitted before the Interior Subcommittee on Appropriations, of which I am a member, that he belonged to 20-some organizations which had been cited as subversive by the attorney general, the FBI and other official Government bodies of the United States of America; he was even on the board of several of these organizations. But he said boldly he was sorry to say he had not had the time to work at it as much as he should. He was also a Presidential appointee. In fact, he had a newspaperman there who was writing up all of his socialistic ideas, indoctrinating the people of the Virgin Islands with that kind of stuff. I presume there are yet a lot of folks down there who still have the effect of that indoctrination in their blood.

To impose this kind of corporation with complete power over the people of the Virgin Islands is dangerous business to my way of thinking. The power of the purse will govern. No one will be able to operate a business unless they are beholden to this corporation. There is talk here about helping private industry. Of course, this will not help private industry because private industry will have to get their money from this corporation and will be under the complete domination of the seven members of this board.

So you will have a condition, as provided in this bill, which will impose on the Virgin Islands a superstate, regardless of anything the Governor can do. The present Governor is an able gentleman. He is one of their own people. He is a colored man with great ability. I do not believe that Governor Hastie will appreciate having most of his authority taken from him as is provided in this bill. It has been stated on the floor by members of the committee that this board will have complete supervision and authority over the government of the Virgin Islands. They will have complete authority over the cities of the Virgin Islands and over the councils of the cities and the people of the Virgin Islands; then it follows that they will also have full authority over the Governor of the Virgin Islands, even though he is a member of this said board. In effect we are setting up a 1-house government without checks or balances, which is not the American way.

In connection with the money that will be lent to people to go into private business, it will be such a small amount that it will be negligible. If this bill is made law, we socialize the Virgin Islands 100 percent in my opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute so that I may ask him a question.

The gentleman is level-headed. Does he want the Virgin Islands Company to continue under political control such as it has been during the past 14 years and perhaps make the Governor of the Virgin Islands president of the company so that he may rule with a ruthless hand, or does he want some businessmen to be put in this corporation and having a board of directors that is not subservient to the Governor of the Virgin Islands?

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman from Michigan is a mighty good businessman and I have great respect for him. There is no man in this House who has greater respect for the gentleman from Michigan than I have. But the Governor of the Virgin Islands should not be a member of this commission because it will take from him the responsibility to govern. He will simply be just a member of the commission, in effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. There is much talk about this being a political set-up. But the President of the United States is going to appoint four of these men. The President of the United States has said in the last day or so that he is going to make political appointments of those who do his bidding. It may be that somebody is going to get a job.

Mr. JENSEN. I was about to make that very statement in answer to the gentleman from Michigan. If there ever was a political set-up recommended in a bill, we have a political set-up 100 percent in this bill because the members of the commission are to be appointed by the President of the United States, and we know right now the type of men he will appoint.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. May I call attention to the fact that the law itself provides that the Governor of the Virgin Islands shall be one of the board of directors set up for its management.

Mr. JENSEN. Yes; I am opposed to having the Governor be one of the Commissioners, because he will have just about exactly nothing to say; he will be sold a bill of goods by these appointive officers; they will run the show, that is a certainty, because they will have the political power in addition to the great power of the purse under the provisions of this bill. The Virgin Islands are primarily suited for recreation and an all-year-round resort. Resort concessionaires should be induced to set up business as we do in our national parks without too much Government control and no Government competition, then soon people from all over the world would flock there, on which the natives could prosper.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for this time in order to inquire of the majority leader what the program for next week will be, since many of the Members are quite interested in knowing as early as possible.

Mr. McCORMACK. I will be very glad to announce the program for the next week.

On Monday we will take up H. R. 2203, census of housing, which was scheduled for today. Following that will be H. R. 4392, payment of war damages to Switzerland. Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday we will take up H. R. 3005, the Federal employees' subsistence and mileage bill, taking care of the inequitable situation that exists, by raising the allowance from $6 to $9 a day. Following that will be H. R. 2682, a bill to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Act. A rule has not been reported out on this bill, but when it is it will come up in this order. Then H. R. 3559, the State Department organization and administration bill. A rule will be reported out on that. Any further program will be announced later.

I might say that there will be no further program of legislation of a controversial nature set for next week. Consequently, any program to be announced later will not involve legislation that will be controversial. Of course, conference reports may be brought up at any time, but I hope that any conference reports will be available to be brought up not later than Thursday of next week.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Can the gentleman advise us as to when the bill upon which a rule has been granted to reform the court-martial procedure will come up?

Mr. McCORMACK. It is coming up right away.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. This afternoon?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has repeatedly stated that he wanted to get the Government out of the rum business. I agree with that statement. I think that this bill, if properly administered, will assist us toward that end, because repeatedly in the report we have tried to point out the fact that there were many other industries there and we have authorized research in order to try to develop other industries in that area.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact that under this bill you are going to permit the corporation to continue in the rum business?

Mr. PETERSON. Yes, but we are already in it. As I said before, we are trying to point out ways to get out of it. We are trying to get them to build other industries, and if that program is carried out, I think we can effectuate it.

Mr. RICH. If you fell into a lake and you wanted to get out, how would you get out? You would swim and get out, and that is the way to get out of the rum business, and get out quick.

Mr. PETERSON. I would grab a log or whatever else I could find or swim.

On page 4 of the report we say definitely:

> The committee is of the opinion that a broadening of the economic base of the Islands, and the development of the local resources, are the only alternatives to continuing annual subsidies, or relief appropriations on a large scale.

Then we say again:

> To encourage and promote investment of private capital in industrial, agricultural, commercial, and related enterprises; to engage in land-use planning; to encourage and engage in the business of providing, whenever adequate facilities are not otherwise available—

We have even gone in and tried to encourage the tourist trade there, which may be in competition with my own fine State. We are trying to point out to them many things it would be better for them to engage in than the one they have tried to engage in in the past. If you will carefully analyze that, you will find that is the trend.

In this House there are two men that both sides of the House can recognize as outstanding businessmen, cool-headed and business-minded. There are many others, of course, but the men to whom I have reference are the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]. May I say also that by reason of long experience on the Committee on Public Lands I became expert in certain phases, but I was not on the Committee on Insular Affairs and do not know as much about insular affairs as I do about certain phases of public lands, although I have tried to inform myself since I have become chairman. However, without trying to disparage the ability of anyone else, the man who is outstanding in his knowledge of this situation is the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]. He has studied it. He has a sound business mind. When he makes a statement as a result of the hearings he held when he was chairman of the subcommittee—and at that time the House passed the bill by an overwhelming vote—his word carries great weight with me in the councils of the House as well as in the committee. They are not going to put anything over on the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], I assure you.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. What is the quickest way to get the Government out of the rum business in the Virgin Islands?

Mr. PETERSON. It is to develop other industries which will be more profitable for them and their economy.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. If we do not pass this bill, will that get the Government out of the rum business?

Mr. PETERSON. If we do not pass this bill, the rum business is there, and it is an industry on which the economy has been based. It is not all they have left. We have to point out something else to them.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Reading from the committee report:

> It is the committee's opinion that the most profitable field for expansion of activities, in terms of widest benefits to the Virgin Islands, is tourism.

Mr. PETERSON. That is right. That is in competition with my own State.

Mr. RICH. If you have that, why not get out of the rum business and develop the tourist trade there?

Mr. PETERSON. We are trying to help them finance hotels and advertising so they will do that.

Mr. RICH. If our country gets into the hotel business you will get out of the rum business?

Mr. PETERSON. That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. RICH. For 15 years we have been working on it. I have tried for 15 years to get the Government out of it, but I have not been successful. Now we are starting a new corporation. Let us get out of the rum business now and stay out of it.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I am sure the gentleman would not want the statement to stand that the principal business is the rum business. They employ only 35 people for a few months at the peak season. Not much of the molasses they use for the rum comes from the Virgin Islands. It is brought over from Puerto Rico. Except for 2 years during the war, the rum business has been carried on ever since the Government and the people of the United States have been in that business.

Mr. PETERSON. I agree with everybody we ought to get out of it. We are trying to point out something else to them.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. If it has been a losing business and has been distasteful to a lot of people, why not get out of it?

Mr. PETERSON. It is already there. This bill virtually sets up a little Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The powers are set forth in there.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I still do not see any argument for keeping the rum business going if we are losing money on it and it is distasteful to people besides.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. I think the tourist business should be developed down there. For that reason, it will be necessary that we withdraw from the rum business very slowly because a complete shut-down in the rum business might retard the progress of the tourist business right now.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentlewoman from Utah [Mrs. BOSONE].

Mrs. BOSONE. Mr. Chairman, we do not hear anyone speak about the Government having taken over the railroads, nor the banks. Yet I can remember a few years ago when we loaned some money to the banks and we loaned some money to the railroads. I want to say that I had to be convinced that this bill is good legislation. My friend on the Committee on Public Lands, our distinguished colleague from Michigan, convinced me. But with all the talk against this bill, I see that we have no other solution, other than the bill before us. Believe me, if this bill does not operate to the benefit of the United States in the next 2 or 4 years, I shall be the first to say that it was a mistake. But I shall always try to come before you with some solution rather than try to tear down what has already been done.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. BOSONE. I yield.

Mr. RICH. For 15 years you have been doing just what you are going to continue to do under this bill—manufacture rum. And you have not made a success of it in 15 years. It is time to stop it, and stop it now.

Mrs. BOSONE. I do not believe so. I believe the bill is different.

When the United States bought the Virgin Islands from Denmark in 1917, they were purchased because of defense considerations only. They were not bought because they were an economic asset. Negotiations between the United States and Denmark started as early as 1867, and our interest on each occasion was to obtain a Caribbean naval base as protection for the Panama Canal. The islands had once been a valuable asset and source of income for Denmark in the days of sailing ships, high sugar prices, and slavery, but this prosperity had been gone for many years when the United States took over the islands.

While we have put considerable sums of money into the islands to improve social conditions, little has been done to bolster the economic base of the islands and to make them self-supporting. Living conditions have been improved, and, although the facilities are still primitive, the Virgin Islands are a healthy place to live for native and outsider alike. Illiteracy is practically nil. Even though equipment, buildings, and so on, are of low standard in continental terms and there are no institutions of higher education, progress in this field has been substantial. As to economic progress, however, the record has not been good. Poverty is still widespread, and the economy of the islands is still most precarious. Unfortunately, the revenues of the insular government are insufficient to meet even the minimum standards of government as we conceive them. Unfortunately, too, several Federal grants-in-aid programs which apply to our States and Territories are not operated in the Virgin Islands. This is a situation which should be corrected. For example, the old-age assistance title of the Social Security Act does not apply to the Virgin Islands and the insular government has had to provide for the crippled and the aged out of its meager revenues. On the Island of St. Croix there are only sufficient funds to provide individual grants of $2.55 per month. Federal grants for aid to the blind are not extended to the Virgin Islands and neither are grants for vocational education.

Because of this situation, in which the Virgin Islands are deprived of benefits extended to the States, The Virgin Islands Company has provided work for a substantial number of people who are physically incapable, because of age or some other incapacity, of producing a day's work for a day's pay. This is a demoralizing situation and its practice in the past has been an important factor in the losses sustained by the Company—but there was no alternative.

There is no question, however, but that this situation is infinitely better than a dole. At least 1,200 people are earning enough money to feed and clothe themselves, even though it is a meager living. Six hundred small farmers are dependent on the Company to grind their sugarcane, which is their only cash crop. Without the operations of the Company they would have no cash to buy the essentials of living that are required. Farming is of such a precarious nature on the islands that it is impossible for the farmer to grow his own food at all seasons of the year and he must rely on imports for at least part of it. More could be done in developing other cash crops, such as winter vegetables and tropical fruits for export, but the little farmer needs guidance and assistance in developing such new crops. Individually he would be unable to arrange for the transportation and marketing of the relatively small amounts that it is possible for him to raise, but with the assistance of the Company and by group action a new source of income will be open to him.

It is vital to the self-respect of these people that they be given the opportunity of earning for themselves a decent American standard of living. The activities of the Company at the present time, limited though they may be, have prevented complete economic and social collapse. The expanded activities of the Company as proposed in this bill will provide a means by which the people of the islands can raise their economic and social standards and provide an American way of life for a group of our citizens too long neglected. In the past our aid to the islands has been to alleviate social conditions caused by the depressed economy. We have neglected to provide a sound and stable base that would eliminate the need for charitable hand-outs and put the islands on a self-respecting, self-sustaining basis.

To the gentleman from Pennsylvania and in answer to a previous question of his, if I were left in the ocean to swim, I would sink, I am sorry to say.

Mr. RICH. Well, do you think the people of your district want to continue in the rum business?

Mrs. BOSONE. The State of Utah is already in the liquor business. We have the State-operated liquor stores in Utah.

Mr. RICH. That is under the State law, but here you are putting every one of your people in Utah, every Mormon out there, every one of the Presbyterians, the Methodists, the Lutherans, and the Catholics, and other Christian people into the rum business as a stockholder. That is what you are doing in this bill, and if you say that is going to raise the standard of living in Utah and you want to do the same thing in the Virgin Islands, then I think you had better go back to Utah and let the people out there say what they think about it.

Mrs. BOSONE. Of course, in Utah we have self-help. I think if this bill becomes law we shall probably get out of the rum business and find that there is something besides rum that is profitable.

Mr. RICH. You cannot get out of the rum business if you stay in it. You should write an amendment prohibiting the United States in the rum business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Utah [Mrs. BOSONE], has expired.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REDDEN].

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid we are somewhat confused about this rum question. I do not know how well qualified I am to speak on the subject, but I can tell you this; that personally and politically I have been just like my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] all my life. So in that respect we agree. However, I do not agree with him in his statement that we are putting the Government in the rum business in the Virgin Islands. There is not a word in this bill which says that the Government is going into the rum business.

Mr. RICH. You are in the rum business now.

Mr. REDDEN. I did not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. REDDEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] comes from the same State that I do, and we are both in the business up there.

Mr. REDDEN. You certainly are.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The State of Pennsylvania is in the liquor business.

Mr. REDDEN. I asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] a while ago if he had done anything to get Pennsylvania out of the liquor business. I am sure he did not do anything to get Pennsylvania into the liquor business, of course; but we are begging the question by bringing up the rum issue in this bill.

This bill provides that the board of directors of this Corporation, five of whom are to be appointed by the President, shall do certain things, and they shall have certain authority. If in their judgment it is wise to continue the rum business that they are already in, the rum business that this Congress has authorized them to go into in years gone by, then I assume the board of directors will continue that business. But I would like to say this, that the Virgin Islands has a climate and a soil that is adaptable to particularly one product, and that is sugarcane.

There are certain sections of America that are better adaptable to certain things, such as my section and farther south are to cotton and tobacco. There are certain sections in this country that raise better corn and more corn than others and at less cost; there are other sections that raise better potatoes and wheat, rye, and so forth. The good Lord did not bless the Virgin Islands with all these natural conditions, but natural conditions in the islands are such that they are great producers of sugarcane, the byproduct of which might well be rum.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REDDEN. I cannot yield now; I wish to finish my statement.

I do not know whether they are going into the rum business or not, but if the spirit of this bill is carried out and if the President appoints the type of men this bill provides for, so far as I am concerned, if they say that business should be carried on a little longer I am willing to go along with them.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REDDEN. I cannot yield to anyone right now.

We have heard a lot about sectionalism in this Congress, about what ought to take place in the South, what ought to take place in the North, the East, and the West. I do not blame anyone because he has his particular views; and I am perfectly cognizant of the role that soil and climate play in creating views and problems. I regard it as somewhat similar to the story that is told up in my section of the mountains of western North Carolina about a preacher conducting an old-time mountain revival. After he had preached for half an hour he asked all those who wanted to go to Heaven to come up and sit on the front seats; nobody came. He was embarrassed and really vexed. Then he turned to the audience and said: "Well, all of you who want to go to Hell come up and have a front seat"; but nobody came. So he turned to the pastor of the church and he said: "Mr. Pastor, there is no need for me to stay here any longer; no one wants to go to Heaven; no one wants to go Hell; I might as well resign now." The pastor rose up in defense of his congregation and said: "Reverend, you just don't understand these people. They live here in the mountains of western North Carolina; they were born and reared here; they have never been anywhere else; they are perfectly satisfied, and they just don't want to move."

That is the way we are about our sectionalism; that is the thing that makes America great: Everybody is satisfied where he lives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. We do not want to take away from those people down there the benefit of the things they can do and raise better than anything else. That is the thing, and if this board says these people should stay in the rum business—I do not participate in the rum business, I do not indulge in it directly or indirectly—but if these men say that is to the best interest of the natives of the islands, as far as I am concerned I will go along with them until they can do something better.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REDDEN. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I wish to correct the gentleman. I believe he said in substance a minute ago that Congress had authorized this rum business. I believe the gentleman is in error there, for I hold in my hand Public Law 510 of the Seventy-eighth Congress. Nowhere in that law do I find language—and I believe the chairman of the committee will bear me out—giving authority to the Government to enter the rum business.

Mr. REDDEN. It may be there is no statutory authority to do it specifically, but it is done by indirection. There is nothing in this bill that puts the Government in the rum business directly.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REDDEN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] a while ago said that Pennsylvania was in the liquor business. They are not in the liquor business in any sense of the word. The only connection with it is to regulate the liquor business. To regulate the liquor business does not mean that you are engaged in the manufacture of liquor; that is an entirely different thing. Here in this bill, however, you are directly putting the Federal Government into business as a stockholder in this Corporation to manufacture rum.

Mr. REDDEN. There may be a difference in the opinion of some people between being in the business of manufacturing liquor and being in the business of selling liquor and receiving the profits. As far as I am concerned I do not see any difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has 18 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Florida, 18.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. POULSON].

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Chairman since we have got into this rum argument, I am wondering whether it is bay rum or whether there is any odor to it. It is rather interesting to note that the Members who are raising so much opposition to this rum business are the same Members who are offering the greatest objection to the funds that are being spent for ECA, for international cooperation, and so forth.

We are attempting by this bill to do the very things that you want us to do. For instance, we know that most of our eastern recreational money, the so-called lush money, is now being spent in the Bahamas for recreation, at the resorts, and so forth.

In the Virgin Islands we have one of the greatest natural places in the world for a real pleasure resort. I hope my esteemed colleague from Hawaii will not take offense when I say that, in my opinion, the Virgin Islands have comparable climatic conditions and that they are the equal of the great Hawaiian Islands to the west of us. All that it is necessary to do now is to develop the Virgin Islands and that is all we are attempting to do in this bill so that the money which is now being spent in the Bahamas by Americans may be spent in the Virgin Islands. In due time, this will not only sustain the present people down there but the population will increase and eventually we will have one of the great show spots of the world. Only by this bill can we accomplish that.

As far as rum itself is concerned, that is incidental to the entire problem. They are in that business now and this is a method by which they can get out of it. Therefore, I believe that the bill is definitely a progressive step so that we may accomplish something along business lines, just as has been stated by these businessmen who have spoken, and so that we may make the Virgin Islands one of the finest resort places in the world. They have all the natural facilities and advantages down there. All we have to do is to give them the opportunity to develop. This bill will do that very thing. As I am not an authority on rum, I cannot speak on that subject.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POULSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman in favor of socialism? That is what they are doing in this bill. We are socializing the Virgin Islands. If the gentleman is for socialization or socialism in any country, they are doing that very thing in this bill. If the gentleman is not in favor of socialism, for goodness sakes, do not vote for this bill.

Mr. POULSON. The gentleman has asked a very fine question. Of course, I am not in favor of socialism. However, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania should realize that we are in the rum business now and this is the only method by which we can help to create outside business and give us the opportunity to get out of it. It is the same as having a sick man on your hands. The gentleman would let the sick man die. We want to give him an opportunity to get well. And so with the Virgin Islands, we want to develop them so that American business may flourish right there in the islands.

Mr. RICH. How about trying to get some individuals down there and let them develop the islands on a private-enterprise basis, on the same basis that has made this country in 160 years the greatest country on the face of the earth?

What we are doing by this bill is one more step toward socialism. Then you will take over the railroads of this country, you will take over the coal mines; you will do in this country what has been done already in Great Britain. Why do we not get out of that sort of business? Keep America free.

Mr. POULSON. There are no laws which prohibit private capital going down there and attempting to go into business, is that right?

Mr. CRAWFORD. None whatsoever and private industry is going down there.

Mr. RICH. But private industry must compete with the Federal Government.

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Chairman, H. R. 2989 takes into account lessons learned from the history and operations of the present Virgin Islands Company.

The charter of that Company merely stated in general terms that its purpose was to accomplish the economic rehabilitation of the Virgin Islands. No specific directives were given as to the manner in which that rehabilitation might be accomplished and no funds were made available to the Company to carry out its objective. Actually, the Company was established for the purpose of operating the properties purchased by the United States, and for providing employment through that operation. This task has been accomplished. The Company has provided employment, directly or indirectly, for most of the working population of St. Croix, providing income for persons who would otherwise be on direct relief. Precisely because the providing of employment has been its objective, its operations have not been a noteworthy success from the financial standpoint. Persons have been employed who, because of their age or relatively low efficiency, would be unemployable by private industry. To assure that positions would be available for these persons and that the responsibilities and techniques required could be handled by them, the Company has not mechanized its operations to the extent desirable to bring costs of cane production down to a minimum, which would certainly be desirable from the financial standpoint in view of the fact that sugar production is unprofitable at its best. Nevertheless, as has been stated, the losses sustained by the Company totaled only $60,000 as of June 30, 1947.

For many years little attention was paid to the Company's activities. The Congress was virtually unaware of its existence since no direct appropriations for the Company were ever requested or made until 1947. The Department of the Interior had responsibility for supervision of the Company by virtue of the fact that the Secretary and Under Secretary were two of the three stockholders, and Interior Department officials served as members of the Company's board of directors. But this supervision was handicapped by the distance of the site of the Company's activities from Washington, and many decisions had to be made on the spot without consultation with Department officials.

During the war period, the Company had considerable difficulty in recruiting and retaining skilled employees. Much of this difficulty was due to the competition from other Federal agencies operating in the islands, which offered regular Government salaries plus a Territorial service differential. The compensation paid by the Company was not even up to Government standards, and employees were not under civil service, although their pay was subject to deduction for retirement.

Review and supervision of the Company's accounts and bookkeeping was sporadic. A thoroughgoing audit of the Company was made in 1945 by the General Accounting Office, which found that the Company was badly in need of permanent arrangements for financing working capital, and possible future operating losses, but concluded that any unsoundness in the financial and account organization and operation of the Company might be corrected by reincorporation under the Government Corporation Control Act of 1945. Such reincorporation would be accomplished by the enactment of H. R. 2989.

Since 1945, supervision of the Company's activities by the Department and by the Congress has been closer. The management of the Company has improved, by the appointment of a new President and the employment of new personnel.

H. R. 2989 would expressly place the new Corporation under the supervision of the President of the United States, or the head of such agency as he may designate as his representative. It would make clear that the new Corporation is to have much wider responsibilities than merely providing employment through the operation and maintenance of the federally owned properties, by expressly authorizing the Corporation to go into fields of land-use planning, transportation, promotion of tourism, and so forth. Funds would be supplied to the Corporation for the purposes of making loans to farmers and industrialists. The Corporation could call upon other agencies of the Federal or Virgin Islands Governments to assist it in carrying out programs. Proposed activities of the Corporation would be subject to review by the Congress through a requirement that they be spelled out in the annual budgets submitted to the Congress by the Corporation. Expenses that may be incurred in nonrevenue-producing programs are limited. Management would consist of a seven-member board of directors, of whom four would be appointed by the President of the United States. Others would be the Governor of the Virgin Islands, the President of the Corporation, and the representative of the President of the United States or his nominee. The object of these provisions is to assure a strong and responsible management and definite financial control by the Congress, as well as to facilitate coordination of proposed programs by the Corporation with related programs by other Government agencies and to insure consistency in over-all Government policy.

The financial provisions of the bill have been examined not only by various officials of interested Government agencies, but by Mr. Crawford, an expert accountant of many years' standing, in the light of methods of dealing with other Government corporations, and of the knowledge gained from the audit of the present Company's operations.

It is my opinion that the provisions of H. R. 2989 will insure proper management and financial control, and that the new Corporation will be able to accomplish considerably more for the islands than the present Company could. I, therefore, recommend the enactment of the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, for 4 years I served as a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs in which we annually struggled with this problem. I expect to support this bill continuing and improving the Virgin Islands Company which has been the most successful of the various approaches we have made to the economic problems of the islands. It is not ideal, and you can make a half dozen objections to it. But, the alternatives—and we examined and explored every alternative suggested—are worse. There are risks in this program; it may not do all we hope. But, those who know what is happening down there know that our present policies are not succeeding. We ought to make our effort adequate in the hope of finally removing this stain from our own good reputation and giving the best break possible to these people for whom we have a special responsibility.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LECOMPTE].

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Chairman, I served for 10 years on the Committee on Insular Affairs and the Committee on Public Lands and served with my distinguished friend the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON], the present chairman, and the previous chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. I know how sincerely and honestly he has labored during his many years in Congress to solve this problem. But, I believe he is on the wrong track in this bill.

Regardless of what may be said, this bill does continue the Government in the rum business, and Government in the rum business is reprehensible to thousands of American citizens. I think the answer to the problem in the Virgin Islands is to encourage private industry in our islands in the Caribbean Sea, and keep the Government out of business. For many years it has been a recognized principle of economics that when the Government goes into business private industry cannot compete. The proposition in this bill, simmered down to its final analysis and in plain terms, is putting the Government in business of various kinds, if I analyze the bill correctly.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LECOMPTE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. POWELL. I would just like to make a correction there. This does not put the Government in business.

Mr. LECOMPTE. It provides for a Government corporation which will furnish the capital for business.

Mr. POWELL. That is right. It provides for a corporation, like our RFC, to lend money to private investors, private individuals, private companies, to build up private enterprise. The Government will not be in business.

Mr. LECOMPTE. That is just what I am in favor of, and that is what we had before the committee in the last Congress and the previous Congress, and it was demonstrated in the hearings that where there is an opportunity for business in the islands for private enterprise, loans may be made from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if a good showing is made that justifies a loan. That is what I am in favor of. In our hearings we went so far as to demonstrate that probably the best opportunity in the Virgin Islands is to encourage the tourist trade. With that thought in mind we went into the question of the erection of hotels. But the Virgin Islands Company wanted to build a hotel at twice what any private individual would put into a hotel of the same specifications. The representatives wanted to spend twice as much per room as private capital would have invested in a hotel, because it was easy money; that was the reason.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LECOMPTE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. I want to say that I do not concur in what the gentleman has said. I think that the gentleman has probably put a construction on this bill which is not altogether warranted. This bill does not authorize the Government to go into any business.

Mr. LECOMPTE. This bill authorizes the Government to furnish the capital for business. Whenever the Government furnishes the capital, the Government is in business.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LECOMPTE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. I think there should be no misunderstanding about the authority that is given to this Government corporation. If the gentleman will turn to section 3, subparagraph (h), which enumerates the authority of the corporation, he will find that it states that the corporation is empowered "to establish, maintain, operate, and engage in, upon its own account, any appropriate enterprise, undertaking, or activity for the development of the industrial, commercial, mining, agricultural, livestock, fishery, or forestry resources of the Virgin Islands."

If this does not authorize the Government corporation to go into business, I do not know what could.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I have in mind that amendments will be offered that will possibly take care of that. I am wholly in sympathy with the attitude of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD]. I have visited the Virgin Islands. I have felt chagrined that we have under the American flag conditions as they exist in the Virgin Islands. However, it occurs to me that the proposition we have before us is a grand experiment in socialism, and that the thing we ought to do under the American flag is encourage private enterprise. I believe the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will loan money to any free enterprise proposition in the Virgin Islands wherever the application shows that it is a sound business proposition. The way to get out of the rum business is to quit and get out of the manufacturing of rum. As to agriculture in the Virgins, I doubt if the entire group of islands produces as much as one good township in Iowa. Only three islands are occupied. Let us encourage a sound self-supporting economy in the islands.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS].

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. May I ask if this does not put the Government of the United States in business when they underwrite this proposition and make their own rules and regulations, as was pointed out by the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MORRIS. The gentleman has asked a very fair and a very proper question. The answer is emphatically no, it does not put the Government in business. It seeks, as I see it, to take the Government out of business.

This is in effect a Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the Virgin Islands. We do not hear the good businessmen of this Nation and the good business corporations complaining about the Reconstruction Finance Corporation being government in business. They think it is very proper in this country, and why will it not be very proper down there?

Let me read from the bill itself, so there will be no mistake on that. I want you good folk who seem to be raising serious questions here to be advised about what is in the bill. If some of your questions should be answered in the affirmative, I would be against the bill, but I believe your questions should be answered in the negative. That is one of the main reasons why I am for the bill.

Page 2 of the bill states that one of the main purposes of this Corporation is—I quote—

> To encourage and promote the investment of private capital in industrial, agricultural, commercial, or related enterprises, undertakings, or activities in the Virgin Islands. Insofar as may be possible without jeopardizing the maximum development of the industrial, agricultural, commercial, and related resources of the Virgin Islands for the public good, the Corporation shall formulate its policies so as to encourage and promote the investment of capital owned by residents of the Virgin Islands.

In other words, not only does it encourage private capital but it seeks to encourage private capital among those people who are already there, and it seems just that they should be given a preference in the matter.

Subsection (g), on page 3, is as follows:

> To make loans to any person for the establishment, maintenance, operation, construction, reconstruction, repair, improvement, or enlargement of any industrial, commercial, agricultural, or related enterprise, undertaking, or activity in the Virgin Islands whenever such loans are not available from private sources.

In other words, it does just what the RFC does here for private business. If private lending agencies cannot make loans to business, then the RFC comes along to make loans to help private business enterprises. I say that this is certainly a far cry from socialism.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman read subsection (h) on page 4, and (f) and (g) on page 5?

Mr. MORRIS. I am sorry; I cannot just now as time will not permit. If the gentleman desires to read those sections later on, he may do so.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. It is putting the Government in business.

Mr. MORRIS. With reference to the question of the rum business, I have great respect for my colleague from Pennsylvania, who has been so insistent on that point. We all have great respect for him. As a matter of fact, I vote with him every once in a while. I think he contributes a great deal to the deliberations of the House of Representatives, and is a very valuable representative of the people. Sometimes I do not agree with him, but often I do, and always respect his opinion. But, that rum issue is begging the question I think, and has nothing in the world to do with this bill. It has nothing to do with it, in my judgment. As a matter of fact, we are not putting the Government in the rum business. This will help take it out of the rum business, and especially if certain amendments, that will no doubt be offered, are adopted. I suppose that rum has been there for a thousand years, if the islands have been inhabited that long, because they raise sugarcane down there. When we took the islands over from Denmark, and long before Denmark ever had them, no doubt they had rum there. That, as I understand it, has been a part of their business all of these years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. PETERSON. I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, this bill will bring in capital to lend to private industries. I hope that those private industries will find other employment in other avenues of business and activities which will help to take them out of the rum business. I verily believe that this bill will help do that very thing. If we leave it as it is now, they will, I believe, continue to stay in the rum business. If we pass this bill, there will be some opportunity for them to get out of the rum business. So if you want to take them out of the rum business, then you should vote for this bill as it probably will be amended.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. Do I understand that the Government is now in the rum business down there?

Mr. MORRIS. It is hardly fair to say that the Government is in the rum business. We own the islands, and rum is there. I guess that they have made rum for a thousand years, if they have been there that long.

Mr. KEATING. But the Government is not making rum there, is it?

Mr. MORRIS. No. I do not understand that the Government is directly making rum there, and neither do I understand that there is any purpose nor proposal that the Government ever should make rum down there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, together with a number of other Members, I also want to get the Government out of the rum business. I do not think it is fair. It was not right in the first place. At the proper time I shall offer an amendment to this bill that I hope will take the Government out of the rum business in the Virgin Islands. Can some member of the committee tell us approximately how much money we have already spent in the Virgin Islands during the years that we have been operating down there? I know that it has run into millions of dollars.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman mean how much we have spent through this company?

Mr. REES. Yes. How much have we spent in the Virgin Islands?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman mean how much we have spent for all purposes?

Mr. REES. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. You mean for national defense and otherwise?

Mr. REES. What is the total amount we have contributed to the Virgin Islands?

Mr. CRAWFORD. For national defense and for maintaining the political government? I suggest the gentleman refer that question to the Committee on Appropriations, over which this committee has no control.

Mr. REES. Then omit the amount for national defense.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. If I may direct the attention of the gentleman to page 5 of the committee report, we find the following:

> The company's working capital was obtained from emergency relief grants totaling $890,327, mainly in the years 1934 to 1938.

Then further, it says:

> Because of the lack of adequate capital, it was necessary for the company to borrow $250,000 from the United States Treasury in August 1947—

Then the company was authorized to borrow additional sums, not to exceed $500,000 from the Treasury to carry out its operations until June 30, 1949.

Under Public Law 510 we made $10,000,000 available, of which $4,000,000 has already been appropriated for public works. Every year we have appropriated money for the city council, so that they can carry out their functions.

Mr. REES. I thank the gentleman from Nebraska for the information. Mr. Chairman, I just do not believe that the Members of the House realize how much money the American taxpayers have spent on the Virgin Islands where there are only a few thousand people. So little has been accomplished. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the Members of the House realize that.

I realize that although hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended for relief and assistance to the people of the Virgin Islands, little progress has been made in helping these people to help themselves.

To me this legislation is extremely socialistic. The so-called corporation described in the bill is nothing more nor less than a Government corporation. It will be headed by the President and the directors are appointed by the President. All of the funds loaned or contributed come from the Federal Treasury. It is a sort of roundabout way of putting the Government in business just the same as if it were doing so directly under a board of directors appointed by the administration.

The gentleman from Oklahoma says we are getting the Government out of business. Then he read from the bill where this Company is going "to establish, maintain, operate, and engage in, upon its own account, any appropriate enterprise, undertaking, or activity for the development of the industrial, commercial, mining, agricultural, livestock, fishery, or forestry resources of the Virgin Islands."

That is the Government corporation we have been talking about. Then the bill goes on to say: "shall have power to acquire, in any lawful manner, any property, real, personal, or mixed, tangible or intangible, to hold, maintain, use, and operate the same; and to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of the same, whenever any of the foregoing transactions are deemed necessary or appropriate to the conduct of the activities authorized by this bill."

In other words, this Board, which the President is going to appoint and of which he will be a member to control the corporation, is the organization that is going to operate this thing. Yet you insist it is sort of a private concern. If any member of this Committee can point to one paragraph or line that indicates that private industry or private individuals have anything to do with the operation of this so-called corporation, I would like to have him point it out to me. As I said before, all of the funds are provided by the Government and the operation is entirely under the control of the President and his appointees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time on this side.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 16 minutes.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KEARNS. I have been listening to the comments about the Government being in the rum business. I think that looks very bad in the RECORD. Could we not all agree that the Government is subsidizing the rum business in the Virgin Islands, rather than saying the Government is in the rum business?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, during this debate the distinguished chairman of our committee and I have done all we could to yield time to those who are bitterly opposed to this bill. We wanted them to have every chance to kill the bill if they can; to say every nasty, mean thing they can in opposition, based on facts or otherwise, and to convince the Congress, if possible, that the Virgin Islands Company should no longer exist, and thus throw those people down there into economic oblivion. The opponents have made their arguments. I am not afraid to make the cold-blooded statement that all the arguments cannot be supported by the facts.

As an illustration, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] a few moments ago referred to the language on page 5 of the committee report, where the language refers to a loan of $250,000 for the Corporation and a loan of $500,000 to the Corporation, and I think if you will read the gentleman's remarks, he spoke of those loans as appropriations. Can it be that the Members of this body do not know the difference between appropriations and loans made to a corporation? If we do not yet understand that kind of language, it is time we began to get better informed.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not yield at all. I have given the gentleman all the time he asked for, and I am not going to permit him to take up my time on this question at this moment.

The language in the report on page 5 speaks for itself. Suppose you are in business: If you have an operating deficit somebody has got to make it up, either the stockholders or somebody who wants to put in new money; but you can be making profits, plenty of them, the property can be reappraised, inventory values increased, and you go to the bank to borrow some money; borrowing money is no proof whatsoever that you have suffered an operating loss.

Some of this talk is absolutely childish, especially when we are dealing with cold-blooded facts that have to do with thousands of people who came in under the American flag not by their consent but simply because the United States reached out and said, "We want this particular area, the Virgin Islands, as a defense base to defend the Panama Canal." We approached the country of Denmark, purchased the islands, and made the people subject to our rules and regulations, subject to our Constitution and all that goes with it. Those are people we are responsible for; those are people that the Congress of the United States is responsible for, and this is the third year in succession this question has been brought to this floor and the Members of the Congress have not had the courage to meet it squarely on the nose and do the proper thing. You went down there in 1934 with the Virgin Islands Company to provide work for people so they would not starve. We killed their economy by closing the Virgin Islands as a coaling base; we took their living away from them. Then we went there in 1934 with the Virgin Islands Company and from 1934 to 1947 the people earned their own living, held their heads up, had some self-respect because they were not on relief rolls; they went into the fields, planting, harvesting, cultivating; they went into the factory making products, or worked in transportation and communication as mechanics and otherwise, just like we do up in our country. They were going along there as American citizens are entitled to go along, making money. Did you lose during that period? Operating losses? Do you want me to talk economics? I can discuss this with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in language that he can understand. Sixty thousand dollars. The cheapest assistance that you ever heard of this country giving any people; and then Members of this Committee stand on this floor and talk about the good people down there being lazy and refusing to work. That $60,000 did not include the depreciation on the factories which were not owned by the Company. The factories were owned by the Public Works Administration of the Department of the Interior and leased to the Virgin Islands Company as an operating company; so, of course, it did not include depreciation on the plants. What is depreciation of plant? If we had the time I could discuss the technicalities of depreciation all afternoon. What is depreciation? Why, the most learned men in industry have debated that question for years and nobody yet knows what depreciation is. But the plants have appreciated, based on replacement values, appreciated. What has happened to the land? You have some of the most valuable land on earth down there because of the natural advantages, the natural values due to the fact that that is one of the most glorious recreational spots under the heavens. We sit here and debate a question like this, yet we know today that we ought to have at least 300,000 tourists a year in the Virgin Islands producing revenue for that people there which would make this Company unnecessary.

Let me tell you what we have to do. You either extend the life of this company on a business basis, as set forth here, under the control of a sensible directorate, or you liquidate that Company just as quickly as you can and throw those people on relief; then take the consequences and the national and international disgrace that will go along with it. If that is what you want to do, you assume that responsibility. You assume that responsibility when you give every kind of a subsidy, every kind of a loan, every kind of a gift human ingenuity can design to every other people on earth, yet deny it to the people of the Virgin Islands.

What is the matter with us here anyway? It is about time we wake up and get a little sense into our think tanks. You talk about refusing to make legitimate loans down in the Virgin Islands under the same formula as voted by our friends that we make through the RFC in this country, and may I say to the gentleman from Nebraska that the RFC has had the authority during the past year to make loans to the Virgin Islands, but not one loan has been made. The RFC has no more idea of making loans down there than it has of flying to the moon and I told them so before the statute was enacted. They are just not going to do business down there.

Now, a moment about the tourist business. People are going down to the Virgin Islands and investing their private funds. Here is my old friend, Jane Withers, the ex-movie actress, now Mrs. Gottlieb, who goes down there with $8,000 in her hands. She sees a little place, she observes the tourist business, and she adds $52,000 to that $8,000. She puts up five or six beautiful apartments and has leased those apartments to the tourists who come down there. There is such a demand for rooms. We need five times the accommodations existing at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, we need those accommodations under the American flag, not over at Bermuda, not over at some other place like Habana, but under the American flag. We here criticize the Virgin Islands when we do nothing to help our own people. Shame on us—all of us.

Now a few remarks about this rum business. I think—I am not sure—my friend from Pennsylvania is a Methodist. If that is not correct I will let him correct it now.

Mr. RICH. I have been called worse than that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reason I say that is because I happen to be one of those, too, born and bred in me as far back as you want to trace it. I understand the gentleman's language when he condemns the liquor industry. Yet the American people are paying about $8,000,000,000 a year for liquor. What State is it that does not substantially depend upon revenue from liquor? What does the Federal Government get out of it? Why, our great Ways and Means Committee has provided a tax of about $9 per gallon, if I am not mistaken, on liquor to bolster Federal revenue. This may be a sinful way to get revenue, but the people seem to enjoy the tax levy.

Down in the Virgin Islands are some great sugar plantations and some sugar mills that make molasses. Molasses is a byproduct of sugar and molasses goes into the production of rum—an integrated industry. Do you want to throw the molasses into the ocean or do you want to work it up into rum? I will answer that question for you. If the price of rum is low and the price of molasses is high, you do not run the rum factory if you have good business judgment. The rum factory has not been running down there for months. Yet my friends over here says, "Let us get out of the rum business." He did not know he has been out of the manufacturing of rum for some time. I have told those people, "Do not make rum if you can get a high price for molasses. Sell the sugar that is in the molasses so the buyer can make alcohol, but do not put high price molasses into rum." I told them that if the price of molasses goes very low and rum is high to reverse the procedure. And what businessman would not make rum then if it is part of his business?

If you do not want rum manufactured, insert an amendment in this bill that the company must sell the rum factory, then give the molasses away and put some more red figures in the operating statement, if you want to do that.

Is that good business? No. You stand here and complain against losses of the company, but you do not want to do the things that will enable the company to make profits. If it is a bad undertaking, kill the thing, but assume the consequences. If it is a bad undertaking and can be improved, I suggest you improve it before you kill the company. But you have got until June 30 to make your decision.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is there not something greater in business enterprise than making profits?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, the gentleman happens to operate his business on a very profitable basis, and you invest money to make profits. When you can make money from your profits, you go over and create your social do-goodies, your welfare foundations, and so forth. But you run a business to make profits.

Mr. RICH. We take care of our employees first.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We are in business to make profits, and nobody knows that better than the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and if you go to him with a proposition that does not have profits, I will bet you dollars to doughnuts he will turn it down.

Mr. ENGLE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLE of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD following those of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan, since he has talked about molasses, if he ever heard that sulfur and molasses went together and that the two together did more to take care of the health of this Nation than anything in the world?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree that sulfur and molasses are unbeatable. I have had to take some myself.

In this last minute let me say this: You have until June 30 to clean this thing up lock, stock, and barrel; otherwise the Company goes out of business. What do you want to do with it? If you want to kill this Company, defeat the bill. If you want to do something about it, you better pass this bill, let it go to conference, and find out what you want to do with it. You make your choice. I will not tell you what to do. I am going to support the bill and try to to put a little business sense into this proposition.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. As the gentleman well knows, I have been interested in this problem with respect to the Virgin Islands for several years, and I want to compliment the gentleman for his zeal and his interest and his analysis of this problem and for the recommendations which he has submitted this afternoon. As to those who are fearful that this bill might be a positive step in the direction of socialism, that might be so, but I am sure there is no more ardent advocate of private enterprise, initiative, and all that sort of thing, than is the gentleman from Michigan, and when he asks for this kind of legislation, I am confident that he is convinced that it is the only proper solution for the people of the Virgin Islands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. ENGLE of California. Mr. Chairman, since I have been a member of the Public Lands Committee I have taken a keen interest in Virgin Islands matters. As Members of the House know, a bill to reincorporate the present Virgin Islands Company was considered by the last Congress. At that time considerable information with respect to the islands and to the Company was garnered by the committee. I think a brief review of the situation in the islands since their acquisition by the United States and of the part played in the local economy by the Virgin Islands Company will be of interest to the Members who are not familiar with Virgin Islands matters, and will be helpful to them in considering H. R. 2989.

The islands were acquired from Denmark in 1917 for $25,000,000. In acquiring the islands the United States assumed a moral obligation for the welfare of the Virgin Islanders, who then numbered about 22,000, and now number something over 30,000. The economy of the islands was predominantly agricultural. St. Croix, the largest island, produced sugar, rum, and cattle, and St. Thomas, the more industrial of the islands, thrived on the activities incident to its possessing the harbor of Charlotte Amalie, the most important commercial harbor in the Caribbean.

A severe blow was dealt to the economy of the islands in 1920, when prohibition was made applicable. St. Croix had been manufacturing rum for more than 150 years and the industry was thus suddenly brought to a standstill. Further, following the transfer of sovereignty from Denmark to the United States, Danish capital began gradually to withdraw from the islands and the most strenuous efforts of the United States to induce American capital to take its place were unavailing. In 1929 the West India Sugar Factory, Ltd., known as Bethlehem, and owned by Danish capital, closed down its factory, the largest in the islands, and took out of production its thousands of acres of caneland. Some 2,000 persons were without employment. Matters were made worse in 1930, when a long and severe drought set in, followed by periodic hurricanes. It became necessary for the American Red Cross to furnish food and other supplies to the people of St. Croix. About 40 percent of the island's population received food through the Red Cross during 1932 and 1933. It was no wonder that in 1931 President Hoover characterized the islands as an "effective poorhouse."

In 1934 the Federal Government realized that it must take the initiative in restoring the local economy or assume the alternative of a relief program of large proportions and long duration. Although every encouragement had been given to private industry in the 17 years that the islands had belonged to the United States, less than $20,000 of private American capital had been invested between 1917 and 1934. There was a great scarcity of private capital in the islands, accentuated by the withdrawal of the National Bank of the Danish West Indies, the only banking institution in the islands. Acreage devoted to sugarcane had declined considerably because the tremendous increase in world cane and sugar-beet acreage and the consequent reduction in the price that sugar could command, taken together with certain adverse factors in St. Croix, such as inadequate rainfall, high evaporation, and rapid run-off of water, likelihood of hurricanes and high freight tariffs, made sugar production in St. Croix unprofitable. Much of the former sugar acreage was turned over for cattle grazing, but this did not solve the island's economic problem because the cattle industry employed only 3 percent of available labor in St. Croix.

In determining what steps to take to restore the local economy, the Federal Government was motivated by the knowledge that the sugar industry, although unprofitable from a commercial point of view, could employ considerable workers, while the rum industry, although a smaller employer, was commercially more profitable now that prohibition had been repealed. These two industries had been the island's mainstays and there were many workers experienced in these fields. In the interests of providing the greatest number of employment opportunities in the shortest time and in rehabilitating the island's main industries, therefore, the United States, through the Public Works Administration, set up a project under the Department of the Interior. In all, something over $3,000,000 was expended by the Federal Government for the purchase of about 5,000 acres of land, a sugar mill, a distillery, warehouses, trucks, villages to house employees, tractors, cattle, mules and oxen, an abbatoir, a market and cold-storage plant, various buildings, and supplies and equipment. Most of these physical properties had belonged to the defunct West Indian sugar factory.

It became necessary to establish an agency empowered to put back into operating condition and then to operate the properties acquired by the United States. The Virgin Islands Company was created by ordinance of the local legislature in the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, on April 9, 1934. The purpose of the company, as stated in the ordinance, was "to aid in effecting the economic rehabilitation of the Virgin Islands of the United States, and to promote the general welfare of the people." No particular program was outlined for the company, and no such specific authority was conferred on it as appears in section 2 of H. R. 2989. It was, however, recognized that the company's primary purpose was to provide employment through operation of the sugar properties and the distillery, as an alternative to paying a dole. It was provided in the ordinance that any income or profits derived by the company should be expended for the economic rehabilitation of the Islands and for the promotion of the general welfare of the inhabitants.

There were only three stockholders, the Secretary and Assistant Secretary of the Interior and the Governor of the Virgin Islands. These men held their shares as trustees for the benefit of the people of the Virgin Islands, and the ordinance provided that no dividends, salaries, or profits should ever be paid to any of the stockholders.

An agreement was entered into between the Secretary of the Interior, representing the United States, and the company, for the operation and maintenance of the properties. From time to time the agreement has been amended to include additional properties, and extended beyond its original expiration date of November 26, 1939, to November 26, 1944, and then to November 26, 1949. Under the terms of the agreement, the company is required to deposit any net profits in the Federal Treasury, the rationale of this provision being that the agreement is in effect a lease of the properties, in return for maintenance of the properties and the obligation to pay profits into the United States Treasury. Thus there have been, and can be, no profits which the company may devote to the economic rehabilitation of the Islands, as provided in the ordinance creating the company.

Until June 1947, not a single appropriation had been made to the company.

The Congress did not contribute up to that time a single penny toward meeting the company's pay roll or underwrite any of the company's obligations. All operations had been financed from operating revenues, and from loans made by Federal agencies or private banks. The sugar operation had never been profitable, but the production of rum, as those who planned the company had expected, was consistently profitable and almost carried the sugar operation. In fact, the total loss from the time the company was established until June 30, 1947, amounted to only $60,000, exclusive of depreciation on the properties, not charged to the company because the company did not own them. That is really an amazing record. During those years, to 1947, without direct aid from the Congress, the company gave direct employment consistently to 50 percent of the working population of St. Croix, paid sums in lieu of income, property and other taxes into the treasury of the Virgin Islands, and made it totally unnecessary for the United States to carry the burden of a relief program. Such a program would have cost millions of dollars over those 13 years. The depression in the rum market after the war, caused by the renewed availability of other liquors, made it necessary for the company to come to the Congress in 1947 and 1948 for authorization to borrow from the United States Treasury. But up until then, there had been not a single appropriation. Now, today, 15 years after the establishment of the company, the United States still owns the property it purchased for operation by the company. Some of the equipment is outmoded, of course, but most of it is in good operating condition. The mill and the distillery are going concerns, the buildings have been well maintained, the land purchased by the United States has been kept productive and has a high value today. The investment made by the United States has been safeguarded by the company.

There is no doubt that the judgment of those persons responsible for the establishment of the company was good. The company has been a necessity for the islands. My criticism of the company is only that it has not been permitted to go far enough. It would be a great mistake from the standpoint of the United States, and would work a great injustice as well as a great hardship on the people of the Virgin Islands, if the company were required to be liquidated now. The economic rehabilitation of the Virgin Islands remains a responsibility of the United States. Enactment of H. R. 2989 would keep alive the activities of the present company and would authorize a program of much wider economic implication for the islands. I urge that the bill be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RICH moves that the Committee now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken and the bill be returned to the Committee on Public Lands with instructions to remove the provision permitting the Government to manufacture rum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the motion as presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not in proper form for a preferential motion.

The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in order to promote the general welfare of the inhabitants of the Virgin Islands of the United States through the economic development of the Virgin Islands, there is hereby created a body corporate to be known as the Virgin Islands Corporation, hereinafter referred to as the "Corporation." The loans made under the authority of this paragraph outstanding at any one time shall not exceed a total of $5,000,000.

The Corporation in carrying on the activities authorized by this act shall utilize, to the extent practicable, the available services and facilities of other agencies and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, or of the government of the Virgin Islands; and shall not engage in any undertaking which substantially duplicate an undertaking previously initiated and currently being prosecuted within the Virgin Islands by any such agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 6. (a) The Corporation is authorized to obtain money from the Treasury of the United States, for use in the performance of the powers and duties granted to or imposed upon it by law, not to exceed a total of $9,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For this purpose appropriations not to exceed $9,000,000 are hereby authorized to be made to a revolving fund in the Treasury. Advances shall be made to the Corporation from the revolving fund when requested by the Corporation: Provided, however, That said fund shall be subject to apportionment in the same manner as appropriated funds.

(b) As the Corporation repays the amounts thus obtained from the Treasury, the repayments shall be made to the revolving fund.

SEC. 7. (a) The Corporation is hereby authorized to use its funds, from whatever source derived, in the exercise of its corporate powers and functions: Provided, however, That the Corporation shall undertake no new types of activities not included in the budget program submitted to the Congress pursuant to section 102 of the Government Corporation Control Act, except when authorized by legislation enacted after said program is submitted, or except, upon finding made by the Corporation and approved by the President of the United States that an emergency exists which justifies the undertaking of new types of activities authorized by this act, but not included in the budget program. Such finding and emergency action shall be reported to the Congress by the President, and appropriations for the expenses of such emergency action are hereby authorized.

(b) The Corporation shall pay into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts interest on the advances from the Treasury provided for by section 6 (a) of this act; on that part of the Government's investment represented by the value, at the time of transfer of the property and other assets transferred, less the liabilities assumed, pursuant to section 10 of this act; and on the net value, as approved by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, of any property and assets, the ownership of which hereafter may be transferred by the Government to the Corporation without cost, or for consideration clearly not commensurate with the value received. The Secretary of the Treasury shall determine the interest rate annually in advance, taking into consideration the current average interest rate which the Treasury pays upon its marketable obligations.

(c) The Corporation shall after June 30, 1949, contribute to the civil-service retirement and disability fund, on the basis of annual billings as determined by the Civil Service Commission, for the Government's share of the cost of the civil-service retirement system applicable to the Corporation's employees and their beneficiaries. The Corporation shall also after June 30, 1949, contribute to the Employees' Compensation Fund, on the basis of annual billings as determined by the Federal Security Administrator, for the benefit payments made from such fund on account of the Corporation's employees. The annual billings shall also include a statement of the fair portion of the cost of the administration of the repective funds, which shall be paid by the Corporation into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 8. (a) Appropriations are hereby authorized for payment to the Corporation in the form of a grant, in such amounts as may be estimated in advance in the annual budget as necessary to recover losses to be sustained in the conduct of its activities which are predominantly revenue producing. The Corporation's annual budget program shall specifically set forth any loss sustained in excess of the grant previously made for the last completed fiscal year. Appropriations are hereby authorized for payment to the Corporation to cover such additional losses incurred.

(b) Appropriations are also authorized for payment to the Corporation in the form of a grant, in such amounts as may be necessary to meet expenses to be incurred for specific programs included in the annual budget which are not predominantly of a revenue-producing character: Provided however, That in the case of activities of a predominantly nonrevenue-producing character the expenses shall not exceed the amounts of the grants for these activities.

(c) The Board of Directors shall have the power and duty to appraise at least annually its necessary working capital requirements and its reasonably foreseeable requirements for authorized plant replacement and expansions, and it shall pay into the Treasury of the United States any funds in excess thereof. Such payments shall be applied, first, to reduce the balance attributable to advances outstanding under section 6 (a) and, second, to the Government's investment represented by the value of the net assets transferred under section 10 of this Act and any subsequent similar investments by the Government in the Corporation.

SEC. 9. The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a Board of Directors consisting of five members, one of whom shall be the Governor of the Virgin Islands, and four of whom shall be appointed by the supervisory official. The Governor of the Virgin Islands shall be the President of the Corporation, and one of the other directors shall be designated as the Chairman of the Board by the supervisory official. The Board of Directors shall act only by a majority vote of those present at a meeting attended by a quorum, and such quorum shall consist of three directors.

Subject to the foregoing limitation, vacancies in the membership of the Board shall not affect its power to act. The directors shall receive no salary for their services on the Board, but under regulations and in amounts prescribed by the Board, with the approval of the supervisory official may be paid by the Corporation reasonable per diem fees, and allowances in lieu of subsistence expenses, for attendance at meetings of the Board and for time spent on special service of the Corporation, and their travel expenses to and from meetings or when upon such special service, without regard to the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended, or the Standardized Government Travel Regulations. Nothing contained in this or any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment and service of any officer or employee of the United States as a director, officer, or employee of the Corporation. The Board shall be responsible for over-all policy making and general supervisory responsibilities.

SEC. 10. (a) There is hereby transferred to the Corporation the following property:

(1) All property—real, personal, and mixed—now operated by the Virgin Islands Company on behalf of the United States, except the property now operated by that Company for the Department of the Interior which was conveyed to that Department by revocable permit from the Navy Department under agreement dated January 1, 1948. The value of the property so transferred shall be fixed at the depreciated cost as of June 30, 1947, shown in schedule 1 of the Comptroller General's report on the audit of the Virgin Islands Company for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1947, adjusted for all changes from that date to the date of transfer, including depreciation at the rates set forth in said schedule 1.

(2) All the assets and property—real, personal and mixed, tangible and intangible—of the Virgin Islands Company. The value of the property so transferred shall be fixed at the value shown on the books of the Virgin Islands Company at the date of transfer, subject to any adjustment deemed necessary as a result of the audit required to be made by the Comptroller General under section 105 of the Government Corporation Control Act.

(3) All of the interest of the United States in the property known as Bluebeard's Castle Hotel situated in the island of St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands. The value of the property so transferred shall be fixed at a value approved by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

(b) The Corporation shall assume and discharge all of the liabilities of the Virgin Islands Company: Provided, however, That such liabilities shall not be deemed to include the balances of relief grants held by the Virgin Islands Company which are invested in the assets and property embraced by paragraph (a) (2) of this section, and such balances shall become part of the investment of the United States in the Corporation.

SEC. 11. The Secretary of the Interior, the Under Secretary of the Interior, and the Governor of the Virgin Islands, who are the stockholders of the Virgin Islands Company, a Corporation created by ordinance of the Colonial Council for St. Thomas and St. John, Virgin Islands of the United States, are hereby authorized and directed to take such steps as may be appropriate to dissolve the said Virgin Islands Company.

SEC. 12. Section 5 of the act of May 26, 1936 (49 Stat. 1372, 1373; 48 U. S. C., 1946 edition, sec. 1401d), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The Virgin Islands Corporation shall pay annually into the municipal treasuries of the Virgin Islands in lieu of taxes an amount equal to the amount of taxes which would be payable on the real property in the Virgin Islands owned by the Virgin Islands Corporation, if such real property were in private ownership and taxable, but the valuation placed upon such property for taxation purposes by the local taxing authorities shall be reduced to a reasonable amount by the Secretary of the Interior if, after investigation, he finds that such valuation is excessive and unreasonable, and any such reduction in valuation, together with the findings on which it is based, shall not be reviewable by any court. The Virgin Island Corporation shall also pay into the municipal treasuries of the Virgin Islands amounts equal to the amounts of any taxes of general application which a private corporation similarly situated would be required to pay into the said treasuries. Similar payments shall be made with respect to any property owned by the United States in the Virgin Islands which is used for ordinary business or commercial purposes, and the income derived from any property so used shall be available for making such payments."

SEC. 13. Section 101 of the Government Corporation Control Act is hereby amended by striking out the words "The Virgin Islands Company" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Virgin Islands Corporation."

SEC. 14. This act shall become effective on June 30, 1949.

SEC. 15. This act may be cited as the "Virgin Islands Corporation Act."

Mr. PETERSON (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be printed in the RECORD at this point, and be open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I suggest to the gentleman from Florida that he modify that request to the end that having considered the bill as being read, that the Clerk then call the bill by section number for amendment so that it may be considered by the Committee consecutively and avoid jumping from one part of the bill to another.

Mr. PETERSON. That is very agreeable.

Mr. Chairman, I will modify my request that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with, to be printed in the RECORD at this point, be open to amendment, and that the Clerk call each section by section number.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modified request?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, but not being a lawyer, and my preferential motion having been turned down by the Chair, I would like to get somebody who is a lawyer to write out a motion that will strike the Government out of the rum business, so that we can have a chance to vote on it. Can the gentleman do it?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman says he has an amendment ready, and we will support it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will offer an amendment at the appropriate place in the bill he might be able to achieve his purpose.

Mr. RICH. My colleague on that side of the House has an amendment ready.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON] as modified?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment to section 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Section 1, on page 2, after "designate" strike out the remainder of line 1 and all of lines 2 and 3, and insert "as his representative."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is at the desk one or more amendments written to change some of the committee amendments which are printed in italics in the bill. Is it in better order for us to proceed to adopt the committee amendments as they appear in the bill and then amend them, or to take care of the amendments first?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman's amendments must be offered to the committee amendments prior to the approval by the Committee of the committee amendments.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEEFE. I understand that the unanimous-consent request propounded by the chairman of the subcommittee provided that the bill should be considered as read and be open to amendment in consecutive sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, the first section having been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an announcement?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman to make an announcement.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, not realizing that so much time would be required on this bill, I called a meeting of the Committee on Rules at 2 o'clock. Because I have a rule to present, I ask that in case you get through here before that time I be notified so that I can come down here. The meeting will be held by the Committee on Rules now.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Would the motion that was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he moved to strike out the enacting clause to stop this from being a rum bill, be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. If the motion is properly submitted it will be in order as a preferential motion.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further.

Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss a few phases of this bill, if I may, which were raised yesterday and in which the committee itself indicated considerable interest as being some background that may assist the thinking of some of us in the consideration of this legislation.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin be permitted to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of my distinguished friend from Michigan and the chairman of the committee, to see if we can get a few fundamental things straightened out. First of all, I would like to know, before I vote on this bill, what is the land ownership in the Virgin Islands at the present time?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman mean the number of acres owned by the Virgin Islands Company?

Mr. KEEFE. No; who owns the land in the Virgin Islands?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman mean the total area of land in the Virgin Islands?

Mr. KEEFE. Permit me to make myself clear.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish the gentleman would tell me what he wants to know.

Mr. KEEFE. I will tell the gentleman what I want to know. The law, under which we bought these islands from Denmark, specifically provided, and I quote section 1405 C (a) of title 48, United States Code, as follows:

All property which may have been acquired by the United States from Denmark in the Virgin Islands, under the convention entered into August 4, 1916, not reserved by the United States for public purposes prior to June 22, 1937, is placed under the control of the government of the Virgin Islands.

That is the law. Therefore, I assume, upon the passage of that law all of the land acquired from Denmark, which was not reserved by the United States Government for its own public uses, passed to the government of the Virgin Islands; is that correct?

Mr. CRAWFORD. All of the land which belonged to the Government of Denmark; yes. But suppose Mr. A had a private farm of his own.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, did Mr. A have a private farm of his own?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly, and that land the United States did not buy.

Mr. KEEFE. That is what I want to know.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct. He did have it, and the United States Government did not buy it, and the Government of Denmark did not sell it to the United States.

Mr. KEEFE. What was the total area of such land?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not know what it was. I just know what happened.

Mr. KEEFE. How much land actually passed, does the gentleman know, to the control of the Government of the Virgin Islands?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman mean in acres?

Mr. KEEFE. I mean in this transaction.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman mean how much land in acres passed from the Government of Denmark to the Government of the United States in the purchase?

Mr. KEEFE. No; I am asking how much land passed to the Government of the Virgin Islands, subject to the control of the Government of the Virgin Islands?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think I understand the gentleman's question now. Of the amount of acreage owned by the Danish Government in public buildings and parks, and so forth, which was sold to the United States, and which the United States did not preserve for its use exactly as in the case of Alaska when we bought that Territory from Russia, that land went to the Virgin Islands Government. In other words, the municipality took them over and operated them. I do not know what the acreage was.

Mr. KEEFE. How was that land disposed of?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The government there, the Virgin Islands municipality, still owns it. It has not been disposed of, or at least if they have not disposed of it, they still own it.

Mr. KEEFE. Do you know whether there are any extensive landholdings in the Virgin Islands that the government of the Virgin Islands now owns?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No, sir; there are no extensive lands there owned by the government of the Virgin Islands because, in the first place, there are no extensive lands in the Virgin Islands.

Mr. KEEFE. That does not clarify the situation. Is there any land owned by the government of the Virgin Islands that can be put up for sale to an investor who wants to go down there, or does an investor have to deal with landowners who have heretofore acquired that land. That is what I would like to know.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should think the so-called Government House in St. Croix, for instance, where the municipal government meets and conducts its business, could be sold by the municipal council to a private individual through the act of the municipal government, provided that the President of the United States and the Congress approved.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I see that in this short period of time I have not been able to obtain an answer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, the gentleman is asking questions that have nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman's questions have nothing to do with the bill.

Mr. KEEFE. I asked some questions yesterday, and I received no answer—no answer at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] has expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five additional minutes, because this is very important legislation, and the gentleman from Wisconsin has something to say which I believe the Committee will be very much interested in.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. I do not want to oppose good legislation, but I am asking some questions to ferret out some of the things that lie behind this. I am going to tell you, my friends, if you study this legislation and study its provisions, you will find yourselves approving the strangest experimentation in government that I have ever heard of.

The argument is made by those who do not like rum that this Corporation should get out of the rum business. I am not going to get into that. I know that the present Virgin Islands Corporation, which is a Government corporation, the life of which will expire on June 30 of this year, according to present law, is engaged in the rum business. They say its engagement in the rum business is necessary in order to provide help for the employees on the Virgin Islands. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] stated that at its height it never employs over 32 or 35 people. Nobody has denied that. Others have said, without denial, that the rum business is operated at a loss.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. In just a moment. Therefore it appears that the arguments being made that this new Virgin Islands Corporation that is being created is to take over the assets of the old company that is going out of business. Included in those assets is this rum business and a hotel, which they presently own, and which is operated at a loss, requiring them to come here from time to time and get bailed out by the people of the United States. The municipality operates at a loss. I do not know what the taxes are. I do not know what those people pay in taxes. Nobody has told us anything about it. There is provision for it here. All I know is that they come to the Appropriations Committee every year and ask for money to bail out the government down there that has been set up under this law. That I do know.

Now, somebody is interested in putting on a deal down there in the Virgin Islands, and they say we are going to have great management; that businessmen are going to take this thing over and operate it. What are they going to operate? What are they going to do? There is no authority in this bill that would permit this new Corporation to engage in a single activity of any kind or character beyond that which is authorized by the Congress of the United States. The only business they can carry on under this law is the rum business and this hotel, and a few other small enterprises. That is the only business they can carry on unless they come before the Appropriations Committee of the House when their budget is submitted—and that is right in the bill—and submit new activities that they propose to engage in.

Now, that is a frank confession, then, that they do not have any plan. That is a frank confession that they do not know what they intend to do. That is a frank confession that we are voting a grant of authority en blanc for this new Corporation to do anything under the sun they can pressure the Congress into permitting them to do, once this authority is granted.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. REDDEN. The gentleman referred to the number employed down there by this Company.

Mr. KEEFE. I referred to what Dr. Miller stated, without controversy.

Mr. REDDEN. That is the reason I was answering the gentleman. On page 4 of the report I see the following:

> In the years since its creation, the Company has, through various activities, given permanent employment each year to approximately 500 persons, and during the crop season, which lasts 4 to 5 months, it has employed about twice that number.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, that is in the sugar business. That is not in the rum business. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] said the rum business has not been working for a long time; that they only run it when the price of molasses is low and it is more profitable to sell rum than it is to sell the molasses.

Now, I think these people have honestly tried to do a job here. But knowing how nations in handling their colonial affairs have heretofore treated the subjects of those countries that they have under control, and knowing how they have been exploited and how devious methods of exploitation find their way into the management of colonial affairs, I am just a little bit concerned about this situation to know if we are going to confess frankly here in this Congress that we can no longer have a government in the Virgin Islands that will permit those people any measure of self-government, and that we must adopt a socialistic or communistic set-up in order to carry on activities in these islands. That is what this plainly and truly amounts to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Are we going to say that because we cannot make money some other way we should engage in a business that no government in the whole United States is engaged in despite what some may say? If this corporation needs money can it go into the slot-machine or gambling business? If, as the gentleman from Michigan says, "this is a wonderful climate and would make an attractive resort area," can it be possible that some interests expect to develop another Reno with quick divorces and gambling as the source of local revenue? I think this bill has implications in it, Mr. Chairman, that ought to call for more study—we ought to examine it pretty carefully before finally putting our seal of approval upon it. This is a bill that ought to be discussed at greater length than this House has been able to discuss it so far.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 1 minute that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr PETERSON. The gentleman asked with reference to ownership of the land; all the land is in private ownership except approximately 100 acres or slightly less.

Mr. KEEFE. I am glad to have that information; then it is subject to tax, is it not?

Mr. PETERSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any better time on earth than today, this week, and next week, for us to learn something about our colonial possessions, and our subjects. My friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin, has referred to the limited time we have in which to debate this question. I do not know of anything more important for us to debate right now than this question; so I am in no hurry to get through with this bill. Let us talk this thing out, let us run through this afternoon, or run through tomorrow on this bill and educate ourselves a little bit about our island possessions. We have got this same question coming up on what we are going to do with Samoa, what we are going to do with Guam, what we are going to do with all of our mandated territories in the far Pacific.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. REDDEN. It has been suggested that this country ought not to have acquired these islands, but I should like to ask: If certain other countries of the world owned these islands, how many billions of dollars would we be appropriating to buy them now?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman is absolutely right. As I say, we have the same question coming up as to what we are going to do with Guam, what we are going to do with Samoa. You ask: What has that to do with this bill, what has that to do with the question as to how much land is owned by the Government? It may be only a hundred acres owned by the Government of the Virgin Islands. We have bills before us right now on all these areas in the far Pacific where we have had people under the heel of our Navy for 50 years without giving them any civilian administration. We stand up here as the great leader in the United Nations Organization, the great leader in the Atlantic Pact, sending billions and billions and billions away, forfeiting the lives of men and women to fight for the independence of other people. What about our own little kids, black, white, yellow, or whatever they may be? We do not need to be in too big a hurry to pass this bill. I want to hear all the opposition against this bill you can pile on this Congress; I do not care how bad it gets. Understand the bill. If this bill proposes to set up houses of ill-fame, you find the language. If you like it, vote for it; if you do not like it, vote to strike it out.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, there was no such argument and the gentleman from Wisconsin did not make that argument. He asked the question. There is nothing to that effect in the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, let us find out if it is in there.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am asking the gentleman as a member of the committee.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Of course, that is not in there. Why should it come into the debate?

Mr. McCORMACK. Let us have a flat denial, then.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, we are working with the emotions, the lives, the desires, and the souls of subjects of the Congress of the United States. They have some rights just the same as I have and I do not propose to be a party to continuing a program which will throw those people on to direct relief and tax the people of my district 5 to 10 times as much for the support of the Virgin Islands as they are being taxed at the present time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Ever since 1934 have we not been feeding money into the Virgin Islands to try to take care of those people down there, whether it be for the corporation or whether it be through the various municipalities?

Mr. CRAWFORD. About $60,000 in the 14 years.

Mr. RICH. How much?

Mr. CRAWFORD. About $60,000.

Mr. RICH. Oh, no.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Oh, yes.

Mr. RICH. I will bet the gentleman a new suit of clothes he is wrong. He is absolutely wrong.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We have some Members on the floor from the Appropriations Committee. I will challenge any member of the Appropriations Committee to stand up here and state categorically whether or not the Appropriations Committee has during the 14 years made an appropriation for the Virgin Islands Company since the original one in 1934.

Mr. RICH. I was on the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not yield any further.

Mr. RICH. I was on the Appropriations Committee at that time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Go right ahead then.

Mr. RICH. I was a member of the Appropriations Committee when we made those appropriations.

Mr. CRAWFORD. For what?

Mr. RICH. Why, for the operation of those islands.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not talking about the operation of the islands.

Mr. RICH. Every year they went in the red.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am talking about the operation of the Virgin Islands Company, which is the subject of this bill. What appropriation have you made?

Mr. RICH. Every year we have made an appropriation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I challenge that statement and I ask the gentleman to refer to the clerk of the committee on the floor and bring in the evidence.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. I think it is perfectly clear that the gentleman from Michigan is referring to the $60,000 appropriation made to bolster up and take care of certain deficits of the Virgin Islands Company. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is referring to appropriations that have been made to provide for the deficits in these municipal governments of the Virgin Islands.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Sure.

Mr. KEEFE. There is a great difference between the two.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, now that we have this matter of appropriations cleared up, let us take up the results of the operaiton of an industrial concern engaging in agriculture, manufacturing, transportation and selling. There has been an attempt to confuse the issues by referring to all of the appropriations for defense purposes during the war, before the war and since the war as if those were losses incurred by this Company. That is the thing I want to bring out here. Put the burden exactly where it belongs. If you voted $5,000,000 to go down there and build sewers, streets, hospitals and public schools, do not charge that up to the Virgin Islands Company.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I have been a member of a party that visited the islands in recent days and in recent years. The thing that stands out in our mind is the lack of cultivation in the Virgin Islands compared, say, with Puerto Rico, Santo Domingo and Haiti. Why is it that that vast area of land, which is tillable, is not put to productive use? The complaint seems to be there are large vested interests down there that will not permit the land to be used or sold so that employment may be had. What is the answer?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will answer that question right straight on the nose.

Here is the situation: In Puerto Rico you have a mountain range that runs from the eastern end of the island to the western end of the island in somewhat of a southwesterly direction. The trade winds hit those islands. You have an immense rainfall on the north side of Puerto Rico. You have very little rainfall on the south side of Puerto Rico. The south side of Puerto Rico is operated, agriculturally speaking, through irrigation. Over on San Domingo and Haiti you have a similar situation, with lots of rainfall, but when you get over to St. Croix, V. I., you do not have the high mountain range; you do not have the trade winds, affected as they are, by the mountains in Puerto Rico; therefore you do not have the rainfall, and therefore St. Croix of the Virgin Islands, that big agricultural area, is almost as dry as southwest Texas, and I have spent lots of time in both places and I know what I am talking about. St. Croix is practically a cattle territory. They have some of the most beautiful herds there I have ever seen. I am talking about cattle on the island of St. Croix where the sugar plantations and the sugar mill and the rum factory are located and where practically all operations of the Virgin Islands Company are carried on. But, we bought some plantations from the Danish people who operated those lands privately. The mills were there. That was in 1934. They have continued to operate, because you can grow good, substantial sugarcane on St. Croix, even as dry as it is.

This bill provides that we go in there and build earth dams to impound that water so that you have water during the dry season, which is 7 or 8 months a year. If you impound that water you can step up the production of agriculture practically double what there is at the present time. I say that as a practical farmer. I have made a study and I am convinced that it can be done. Those earth dams can be built that will impound anywhere from 5,000,000 to 15,000,000 gallons of water for as little as $2,000 to $3,500, because it is nothing but straight bulldozing work; no granite, no hardpan or rock, very little gravel, so that we can build them very cheaply. We should impound that water; we should put it out to irrigation; we should go in there and terrace that land and prevent the soil from being washed away and do some of the things down there that you have paid farmers in the United States millions of dollars to do.

But, the gentleman say, Why the dissimilarity in agricultural operations? It is on account of slight rainfall in the Virgin Islands. There is little well drinking water there. They use catch basins to impound rain water for drinking purposes. They do not have many wells of good water.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Does the Virgin Islands Corporation now exist and is it now existing?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Virgin Islands Company has been operating since 1934. Here we change the name to the Virgin Islands Corporation.

Mr. KEATING. Then let me ask this question: Does this Virgin Islands Company now have substantially all the powers set forth in subdivision (h) on page 4?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Its powers at the present time are restricted primarily to agriculture, running the sugar plant, the sugar mill, the rum factory, disposing of the rum, and growing some cattle, growing some truck crops, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This bill does three primary things: It extends those powers. It extends the powers; it broadens them considerably.

Mr. KEATING. Makes them general rather than specific.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes. No. 2, it provides the necessary funds to do a lot of this new work I am speaking about, and to rehabilitate the sugar mill, put some new machinery in there, bringing it to an efficient basis where you can efficiently get the sugar out of the sugarcane after it is grown. No. 3, $5,000,000 of this $9,000,000 that has been talked about is for lending purposes only. None of it can be used unless somebody makes application for a loan and collateralizes that loan. So, when you think of the $9,000,000, think of the $5,000,000 for loaning purposes as a little RFC.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. There has been quite a lot of argument about the Government being engaged in the rum business down there. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] is going to offer an amendment on page 4, line 23, prohibiting the Government from engaging in the rum business, and the committee is going to accept that amendment, so that that will be eliminated. I want to say that in order to save some time.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes, out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, a few weeks ago I was privileged to visit the beautiful capital of our neighboring island of Cuba and to attend a solemn session of the Cuban House of Representatives in commemoration of Pan American Day.

It was a memorable and gratifying experience to have had the opportunity to meet the President of the Republic of Cuba, the Speaker of the Cuban House of Representatives, Members of the Congress, and officials of the Cuban Government. The warm and cordial reception accorded to me and to my colleagues, the gentleman from Nebraska, Representative STEFAN, and the gentleman from Georgia, Representative PRESTON, will always be gratefully remembered by us. It offers ample proof of Cuba's well-deserved reputation for hospitality and of the close and friendly ties which happily exist between the peoples of our two countries.

I know that I express the feelings of my two colleagues, as well as my own, when I say that we experienced very special satisfaction and pride in witnessing the heartfelt tribute which was rendered on that day to our great liberator, Abraham Lincoln. His memory was extolled with such sincere veneration that no American could be impervious to the glory reflected on all the citizens of our land by a man whose life is everywhere regarded as a symbol of heroic endeavor in defense of human rights. We were impressed by the fact that Cubans know our history; they study it and they seek to understand us through it. From early school age they become familiar with the names and the accomplishments of our great figures and they take pride in them, as in their own. And, believe me, gentlemen, Cuban history has its full share of heroic men; great sons of a small but proud island, whose devotion to a high cause, whose courage, sacrifice, and untiring effort made it possible for Cuba to take her rightful place in the community of free nations.

Among the many sterling men who conceived and shaped the Republic of Cuba none is rightfully more revered and loved, none surrounded by such an aura of immortal fame, as the man whose very name has become a symbol of the most exceptional human virtues: Jose Marti. He is referred to, with a reverence bordering on worship, as the Apostle, for from early youth he braved the rigors of prison, the vicissitudes of exile, and all the hardships to which the mind and flesh of man can be subject, to preach the gospel of a free Cuba. In the end he paid the supreme price; though not a warrior or a military man, he faced—even welcomed—the perils of the battlefield and he shed his life's blood on the soil of the beloved country whose freedom—which he did not live to see—had been his guiding aspiration.

Cuba—

He had said—

must be an altar on which to offer our lives, not a pedestal on which to raise ourselves.

Born in Habana in 1853 of poor and humble parents, Marti began to show evidence at an early age of the brilliance which was later to illuminate the entire firmament of Latin-American letters. Before reaching the age of 16 Marti had already written and published poems and newspaper articles in which he revealed his unmistakable revolutionary ardor and which led to his imprisonment under the most severe and trying conditions. This experience, which almost broke his health, fired him with increased zeal for the cause of liberation. Forced to leave for Spain, he started a lifetime of exile which took him to many countries, and which was broken only by a brief return to Cuba many years later, and by his final return in 1895, when he was to meet his death.

To Marti it was the bitterest of ironies that he should have spent the greater part of his life away from the homeland he so dearly loved. His travels took him to Spain, to Mexico and Central America, to Venezuela, and for a period of many years to our United States. In Spain he pursued university studies and received degrees in law and in philosophy. He was an avid scholar and his quest for knowledge never ceased. In our country he diligently set himself to the task of mastering the English language, and for many years he contributed articles regularly to newspapers and publications, including the Sun. Everywhere he went he taught, he wrote, he spoke. His writings encompassed a wide variety of subjects, revealing amazing versatility and a wide range of knowledge. While Marti was in the United States, Argentina and Paraguay named him honorary consul, and Uruguay designated him as representative to an international monetary conference held in Washington, at which he read a paper on economic problems. If his prose is famed, his poetry has been hailed as among the finest in the Spanish language. Through his poetry Marti poured out his soul as an indefatigable rebel against oppression in all its manifestations. It has been said that, if liberty was almost a religion to him, poetry was his form of worship. Through his writings Marti is also revealed to us as a soul in which there is no room for hatred or animosity toward anyone, even toward his bitterest critics and enemies. The lesson of Marti's life has often been called a lesson of love—of the selfless pursuit of an ideal with no other thought of recompense than the welfare of his fellow man.

But Marti was no impractical dreamer, no armchair idealist. He was a born leader and organizer. He founded the famed Cuban Revolutionary Party while in exile; he planned and organized expeditions to colonial Cuba; he raised funds for the revolution; he obtained the sympathy and support of the people of foreign lands for the cause of Cuba. Marti excelled in all his undertakings—as a writer, a critic, a journalist, a poet, an economist, a politician in the noblest sense of the word—he was, above all, a man, a man of thought and a man of action.

Marti was a farsighted champion of pan-Americanism, of the unity of all the American people. He felt the voice of America, he knew how to express it, and he died in order for his dream to be realized.

America—

He said—

must promote everything that draws people together, and must abominate everything that pulls them apart.

He was forever building a bridge of friendship and understanding between the people of the American nations. He interpreted our history, our statesmen, our writers, and our poets, for the people of his tongue and his culture; conversely, he forever revealed to us the spirit of his own people. For the United States he had words of highest praise.

The greatest country ever engendered by liberty—

He described us, and he also said on another occasion:

It seems to me that in the United States all problems that concern and trouble the human race are to be met and resolved, that the free exercise of reason is going to save mankind much misery and doubt.

He wrote profusely about Lincoln, whom he greatly admired. It is, in fact, impossible to mention these two men without reflecting on the striking likeness between them—not in a physical sense, but in their ideals, their principles, their aspirations, even in their humble beginnings and their strenuous careers. "With malice toward none," is a phrase that could just as well have been spoken by Marti, while Lincoln might have found his own words echoed in the Cuban patriot's injunction that "the first law of our Republic must be the tribute of the Cuban people to the full dignity of man."

To Marti, the preeminent man of letters, the champion of human rights, the apostle of freedom, we render our homage of respect and admiration. He has scaled the heights of immortality, his glory and his attainments belong to history—they are the cherished possessions of Cuba, of America, of humanity.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 2?

If not, the Clerk will read the committee amendments to section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 4, line 2, strike out the words "of such sound value or."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 4, line 6, after the comma strike out the balance of line 6, all of line 7, and line 8 down to and including the word "per annum" and insert "and shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 6 percent per annum. It shall be the general policy of the Corporation to establish interest rates on loans, subject to the foregoing limitations, that, in the judgment of the board of directors, will at least cover the interest cost of funds to the United States Treasury, other expenses of the lending activities of the Corporation, and a risk factor which, over all, should provide for losses that may materialize on loans."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the language on page 3, line 10, and line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD:

On page 3, line 10, after the word "property" strike out the words "to and from" and insert the word "between."

On line 11, strike out all after the word "Virgin Islands" and insert "and to and from the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, and Tortola."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment explains itself. The bill as written provides that "the Corporation may engage in the business of providing, whenever adequate facilities are not otherwise available, transportation for persons and property to and from the Virgin Islands, and from place to place in the Virgin Islands."

The meaning of the amendment is to leave it so that the Corporation, if necessary, can operate its own small boat between the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico, and from one Virgin Island to the other, and carry the commerce of the Corporation; and also, when required, to move produce and livestock from the Virgin Islands to Puerto Rico; and also from the Virgin Islands to Tortola, which is a British-owned island.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is agreeable to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 3, line 18.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD: Page 3, line 18, strike out the words "administer, operate."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, that is to give the company the right to assist farmers owning small tracts of land which they purchased.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, we agree to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment on page 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD: On page 4, line 23, after the words "Virgin Islands", strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That such enterprise, undertaking, or activity shall not be in substantial competition with any existing private enterprise, undertaking, or activity."

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, we consider that a good amendment and are glad to accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of Nebraska: On page 4, line 18, strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$2,500,000."

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the language of the bill reads:

The loans made under the authority of this paragraph outstanding at any one time shall not exceed a total of $5,000,000.

I am asking to cut that down to $2,500,000, and I expect to do the same thing on page 9, where they permit them not to exceed a total of $9,000,000 at any one time. I believe these items are too large. There are only about 600 employed the year around and another 600 at the peak of the season. While we are merely enlarging the Corporation from the old Virgin Islands Company, we are giving them a full range of power. To me it will be an expanded socialistic dream giving the board full power and control with this Government going into every type of business. It is pure socialism. I am, therefore, offering this amendment in good faith—that if we must go into this experiment in socialism that we take it in small doses. The amendment merely seeks to cut the authorization in half.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as I have pointed out in the debate, five million of the nine-million-dollar structure which item appears at the top of page 9 of the bill is provided for lending purposes, not for operating purposes; in other words, the new Corporation is hereby authorized to lend up to $5,000,000 provided that people wish to engage in private enterprise, file applications for loans for that amount, and qualify for the loans. Furthermore, this entire operation is under the supervision, and the questioning, and the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and of the Senate.

I feel we should do either one of two things, as I have said before: Put this Company on a sound basis, or kill the Company and liquidate it. I, therefore, object to the reduction of $2,500,000 in the $5,000,000 item which appears in line 18 on page 4 of the bill, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. GAVIN. While the gentleman is on his feet—I know he is a great student of economic affairs in Puerto Rico—I wonder if he can tell us something about the experiment we carried on several years ago in putting up a glass plant and other factories in Puerto Rico. Can he tell us what success we had with that venture?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; I can tell the gentleman something about that. In the first place, the Congress of the United States had nothing to do with it whatsoever; it was a program operated entirely by the Government of Puerto Rico which has its own revenues, has its own budget to which we make no contribution if it has a deficit; and the funds for that experiment, the building of the glass factory, the building of the cement mill, the building of a textile mill, the building of a big tile factory, the building of a bottling plant and of a paper-box factory—those funds were provided primarily from remittances which the Federal Government made to the Government of Puerto Rico as provided in laws approved by Congress; funds coming from the export tax on rum produced in Puerto Rico and shipped out; taxes collected by our Federal Government and remitted to the Puerto Rican Government; all in accordance with law. Puerto Rican Government does, of course, have substantial revenue.

In the case of those enterprises, the cement mill, I think, has proven to be one of the most successfully operated plants of its kind in the world. I have had a chance upon numerous occasions to inspect the plants and the books of the company—and as late as the first week of this last January. The cement company has made what we sometimes term "fabulous profits." I am talking about the cement mill. It has been of great benefit to the people and to the Federal Government. The glass factory and some others have not yet gotten into the black.

Mr. GAVIN. Can the gentleman tell us what the capitalization of that enterprise was and approximately how much they have been losing each year?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was coming to that. The glass factory, the tile factory, and the textile factory are all new operations. They have not yet gotten into the running channel and they are not on a profitable basis. They are running in the red and the Government of Puerto Rico through the taxpayers, are having to support those deficits which are being piled up. I am not making any forecast about what will happen hereafter. I opposed the establishment of those enterprises by the Puerto Rico Government in every way I knew how. My friend and colleague from New York [Mr. COLE], supported me in this opposition. We protested and we pled with the Ways and Means Committee of this House to put restrictions on handing to the Puerto Rican Government the export tax on rum, but we were unsuccessful in putting any kind of a bridle on those funds. Much of the funds went into these plants and the future will have to answer as to whether or not the operation will be successful.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. PETERSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the gentleman from Nebraska has an amendment on page 4 and also an amendment on page 9. Are we working on both amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The only amendment before the Committee at this time is the amendment on page 4, line 18, to strike the sum of $5,000,000.

Mr. STEFAN. We are not acting on the two amendments en bloc?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. STEFAN. Merely on the $5,000,000 item on page 4?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct; the amendment to line 18, page 4.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, what has been stated by the gentleman from Michigan in reference to this is correct and it goes to the whole gist of the situation. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. Chairman, in the interest of time may I say that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], among others, have been very much interested in seeing an amendment adopted with reference to prohibiting the manufacture of rum or other intoxicating liquor. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN], will offer such an amendment and I anticipate it will be adopted.

We want to save as much time as possible. I realize there are others who may wish to speak on this matter. But the chairman of the Armed Services Committee is standing by with another bill for consideration. May I ask at this time that such Members as may desire be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD following those of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] when he offers his amendment? That might save some time.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that after the address of the gentleman from Louisiana any Member may have permission to insert his remarks in the RECORD at that point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to section 3?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana: On page 4, line 23, after the word "Island" strike the period, add a semicolon and the following: "Provided, That the Corporation shall not engage in the manufacture of rum or other alcoholic beverages."

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. PETERSON. I will be glad to state to the gentleman that we on this side will accept that amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I congratulate the gentleman having this amendment adopted. I think it will cover a multitude of sins.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to inquire what effect the adoption of this amendment will have on the amendment which was adopted some time ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is impossible for the Chair to make any attempt to interpret the effect or meaning of this or any other amendment. The gentleman may examine the amendment at the desk. The Chair would like to accommodate the gentleman in every way possible.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand that the gentleman's amendment applies to the language on page 4, line 23, following the words "Virgin Islands"?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Yes; that is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As I understand the situation, Mr. Chairman, that will upset the amendment that was adopted a few minutes ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana follows the amendment previously offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I only have a word, and I do not want to take the time of the committee, because we have other important matters before us, but this, I think, settles the question of rum manufacture by the Government in the Virgin Islands. It has been a very distasteful matter to me and to a great many other Members that the Government was directly or indirectly engaged in the manufacture of rum for alcoholic beverages in the Virgin Islands. I want to stop that, and I think a lot of the Members want to stop it, and a lot of people want to stop it, and I think this amendment will stop it.

This rum-manufacturing business has been operated directly or indirectly by the Government in the Virgin Islands for some 14 or 15 years. The argument has been made that it was necessary to carry this on to help the economic situation in the islands. From the statements made here today on the floor, that position is absolutely untenable, in view of the fact that the business has been losing money. If it has been losing money, as they say, it has certainly not contributed to the economy of the islands. These islands were bought largely for military protection some years ago; and if the economy of the islands must be supported by our Government, as it must, then the remedy is to seek some other plan. I appreciate the fact that the people are to a great extent wards of this Government, and I have no desire to evade that responsibility, but that responsibility cannot be met by throwing the islands into the rum-making business.

I have long sought an opportunity to stop this liquor-manufacturing business by our Government, and I think some other Members of the House feel the same way about it, and my amendment offers the first opportunity to stop this iniquitous business. I am grateful to the chairman of this committee and other fine gentlemen on the committee who view this matter pretty much as I do and who have agreed to accept this amendment. I hope that the amendment passes and that it will remove this blot from our record of handling the Virgin Islands' affairs.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. The amendment offered by the gentleman is similar to one I submitted, excepting that the gentleman from the majority side was first called upon to offer it. I will be glad to support it.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. I am in sympathy with the amendment. The whole controversy is whether or not the Government is going to engage in the rum business or continue in the rum business, but the gentleman's amendment reads, "alcoholic beverages." What would prevent, in case of an emergency, that organization making alcohol for the purpose of making butadiene for rubber, or for war purposes? Would this stop it from making any alcohol for that purpose?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. My amendment refers to making alcoholic beverages for drink.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. As I understand, under the provisions of the pending bill all of the assets and property, real, personal, or mixed, tangible and intangible of the present Virgin Islands Company is transferred to this Corporation. Do I understand that among those assets is this rum-making plant there in the Virgin Islands?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Well, the chairman will have to answer that.

Mr. PETERSON. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. Now, if the gentleman's amendment is adopted, and by the passage of this bill the Virgin Islands Company is put out of business, it will be out of business with a rum plant on its hands; will it not?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Well, the Government has no business with a rum plant.

Mr. KEEFE. My question is, What provision is there in the law to provide for the orderly liquidation of that part of the Virgin Islands Company business?

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, there is an amendment on the desk which I think will be accepted by the committee providing for this equipment to be disposed of some time during 1951.

Mr. KEEFE. I find nothing in the bill as it is, and I raise the question because that ought to be taken care of.

Mr. REDDEN. It will be.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that in the Allen amendment the word "further" begin after the word "provided." That ties it in with the Crawford amendment, and we will be glad to accept it on that basis.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN]. It is similar to an amendment that I have also submitted for consideration of this committee.

There is no good reason or excuse why the taxpayers of this country should contribute to the production of rum in the Virgin Islands, or anywhere else. The situation is even more absurd when we are told by the members of the committee submitting this legislation that the manufacture of rum is a losing proposition financially. In any event, whether losing or not, the sooner we get out of the rum business in the Virgin Islands the better it will be for us, and it will also be better for the people of the Virgin Islands to engage in a more laudable business than that of manufacturing rum.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] is so right as he always is, in offering the amendment to H. R. 2989 preventing the proposed Corporation to be known as the Virgin Islands Corporation from continuing the manufacture of rum or other intoxicants on the Virgin Islands or elsewhere.

It is shocking to realize that the Government, at least indirectly, has been engaged in the manufacture of rum. It is not shocking that the Government has lost money in its rum manufacturing, but is typical, for in nearly every instance where the Government has gone into business, money has been lost. In this connection, I call attention to the following figures which are astounding:

During the United States Government's fiscal year which ended June 30, 1948, according to figures published in the Christian Advocate (Methodist weekly paper), the liquor traffic used the following huge quantities of grain, sugar, and fruit in the production of its alcoholic beverages: 39,295,948 bushels of corn, 64,678,107 bushels of barley, 302,281,630 pounds of rice, 368,824,066 pounds of rye, 366,007,385 pounds of sorghum, 193,275,206 pounds of sugar, 2,554,650 gallons of molasses, 1,969,966,181 pounds of grape and other fruits, 199,814,590 gallons of fruit juices.

The statistically minded editor of the Christian Advocate has calculated that the 39,295,948 bushels of corn would have produced 220,000,000,000 pancakes, enough to have given 25,000,000 hungry people a plateful of 5 pancakes for breakfast each morning for 1,760 consecutive days, almost 5 years. The reader can calculate for himself what the other quantities of food which the liquor traffic diverted and consumed in 1 year, would have contributed in feeding a desperately hungry world.

When the American people voted to repeal the prohibition amendment they were never told that 15 years later the liquor interests would have diverted in 1 year for the manufacture of alcoholic beverages enough corn to have given 5 breakfast pancakes to each of 25,000,000 hungry people each day for 5 consecutive years.

The gentleman from Louisiana is to be congratulated in offering his amendment, and I hope the majority of the Committee will vote to exclude or strike out such provisions in the bill as would permit the manufacture of rum.

I do not know what moneys are invested in the equipment or machinery for the manufacture of rum. However, I favor disposing of the equipment without delay at whatever price can be obtained therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided and there were—ayes 36, noes 23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 3?

It not, the Clerk will report the committee amendment to section 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 5, after "Corporation" insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That in no case shall the Corporation contract to undertake an activity for any agency or instrumentality of the United States, or with any State, Territory, or possession, or with any political subdivision thereof, unless the latter is authorized by law to undertake such activity and furnishes the funds for such purpose."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 7, line 1, after "Corporation." strike out the remainder of line 1 and all of lines 2 to 7 down to and including the word "person" in line 8, and insert the following: "In the appointment of officials and the selection of employees for said Corporation, and in the promotion of any such officials or employees, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of said board who is found by the President of the United States or his representative to be guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any appointee of said board who is found by the board to be guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by said board."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other amendments to section 4?

Are there any amendments to section 5?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD: On page 8, line 22, after "instrumentality" strike out the period and insert "or by any private corporation, partnership, or person."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to further protect private industry and private operators in the islands.

Mr. PETERSON. We agree to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 5?

If not, the Clerk will report the committee amendment to section 6.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 6, after "Corporation" strike out the remainder of line 6 and all of lines 7 and 8.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 6?

If not, the Clerk will report the committee amendments to section 7.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 15, after "shall" insert "not."

Page 9, line 15, after "undertake" strike out "no" and insert "any."

Page 9, line 20, after "except," insert "when the Congress is not in session."

On page 10, line 16, after "advance," insert "such rate to be calculated to reimburse the Treasury for its cost."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD: at page 9, line 19, after the word "enacted" insert "by the Congress."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, that is a clarifying amendment tying the language to the Acts of the Congress of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 7? If not, the Clerk will report the committee amendments to section 8.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments to section 8 be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments:

Page 1, line 13, strike out "recover" and insert "cover."; line 14, after the word "are" insert "included in the annual budget as"; line 21, starting with (b) strike out all of lines 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 and all of lines 1, 2 and 3 on page 12, and insert:

"(b) Appropriations are also authorized for payment to the Corporation in the form of a grant, to be accounted for as general funds of the Corporation, in such amounts as may be necessary to meet expenses to be incurred for specific programs which are included in the annual budget as not predominantly of a revenue-producing character: Provided, however, That (1) in the case of activities of a predominantly non-revenue-producing character the expenses shall not exceed the amounts of the grants for these activities, and that (2) the funds granted under this subsection shall be expended only upon certification by a duly authorized certifying officer designated by the Corporation, and the responsibilities and liabilities of such certifying officer shall be fixed in the same manner as those of certifying officers under the Act of December 29, 1941 (55 Stat. 875), as amended (31 U. S. C. 82b–g)."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to section 8? If not, the Clerk will report the committee amendments to section 9.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments to section 9 may be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments: Page 13, line 6, after the period strike out the balance of the lines down to and including all of line 16, and insert:

"The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a Board of Directors consisting of seven members, including the Governor of the Virgin Islands, the President of the Corporation, the President of the United States representative or his nominee, and four others who shall be appointed by the President of the United States.

"The Board shall select its Chairman. The appointed directors shall serve for a period of 5 years, except that the terms of the members first appointed shall be shortened to provide for replacement or reappointment in number as nearly equal as possible each year. Qualifications of Board members shall include demonstrated ability, attachment to the public interest, impartiality, and diversified experience among its members. The Board shall include members who are not full-time employees of the United States, the government of the Virgin Islands or its municipalities. The Board shall be responsible for over-all policy making and general supervision. The Board shall meet at least quarterly, at least one of which meetings each year shall be held in the Virgin Islands. The Board of Directors shall act only by a majority vote of those present at a meeting attended by a quorum, and such quorum shall consist of four directors."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD to the committee amendment: Page 13, line 18, after the words "Governor of the Virgin Islands" strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert "the designee of the President of the United States, as provided in section 1, and five others, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to clarify the language of the bill. The bill provides for a Board of Directors of seven. In view of the fact that the Virgin Islands were under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, the committee felt that the Department of the Interior should be represented on the Board of Directors, acting for the President of the United States. The amendment inserts the proper language in the bill for that purpose.

Mr. PETERSON. That is agreeable.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD to the committee amendment: On page 14, line 4, after the words "The Board shall", strike out "include" and insert "be composed of"; and on line 6, after "municipalities" strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "except the designee of the President of the United States and the Governor of the Virgin Islands."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this language is to provide that the Board of Directors of the Corporation shall consist of people who are not full-time employees of the United States or of the government of the Virgin Islands, with the exception of the Governor of the Virgin Islands and the designee of the President, or, we will say, someone of the Department of the Interior. In other words, the Board of Directors will consist of the Governor of the Virgin Islands, the representative of the President of the United States, and five other members to be selected by the President of the United States, thus constituting the Board of seven.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is agreeable to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is agreed to.

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments: Page 14, line 17, strike out "supervisory official" and insert "President or his representative"; line 21, strike out "special" and insert "official"; and after the word "their" insert the word "necessary"; line 23, strike out "special" and insert "official."

Page 15, line 2, after the word "service" insert "without additional compensation."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 15, line 3, after the word "director" strike out the balance of the line and all of lines 4, 5, and 6, and insert "The administrative functions shall be centered in a staff of full-time executive officers headed by a President appointed by the Board. The President shall be responsible to the Board for the execution of programs and policies adopted by the Board and for the day-to-day operations of the Corporation. Between meetings of the Board, the Chairman shall see that the Corporation faithfully executes the programs and policies adopted by the Board."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD to the committee amendment: On page 15, line 8, after the word "President" at the beginning of the line, strike out the remainder of the sentence and insert "elected by the Board from its members."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to provide that the President of the Corporation shall be elected by the Board of Directors, and that he shall be one of the members of the Board.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, the committee is agreeable to that amendment.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to object, but I am wondering why we have so many amendments to this bill that comes from the committee. Could not the committee take care of these things before they brought the bill to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not like to undertake to answer that question.

Mr. PETERSON. Well, these are suggestions that certain members have made. They were not considered serious or worth objecting to. Any bill can be improved.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any additional amendments to the committee amendment to section 9?

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is entertaining amendments to the committee amendment in section 9.

Mr. REES. Well, it follows the committee amendment in the bill, so I assume it is an amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REES to the committee amendment: On page 13, line 21, at the end of line 21 insert "At least two of said Directors shall be members of the minority party."

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I am proceeding on the assumption that the intention of the Committee is to appoint at least a partially nonpartisan Board. This amendment provides that at least two of the members should belong to the minority party. I cannot see how there can be any objection on the part of the Committee to this amendment.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the distinguished gentleman and active member of the committee.

Mr. REDDEN. What minority party would that refer to? I would have no objection, personally, if you say "two members of the Republican Party." But when you say "minority party," there are so many minority parties that I do not know who you mean.

Mr. REES. I was thinking of the language used in other bills. The Republican Party is regarded as the minority party at the present time. Of course, it may be the majority party later on.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield.

Mr. PETERSON. Ordinarily I would be heartily in favor of what the gentleman is attempting to do. However, we tried to make it entirely nonpolitical, and there is a provision in section 7 that in the appointment of officials and the selection of employees no political test or qualification shall be allowed. We tried to keep it altogether out of politics. Were it not for that, I would readily consent to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. REES. I read the section to which the gentleman refers, but I think this is an additional protection that is proper to place in the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I think the amendment the gentleman proposes is one that I suggested in committee. It follows the pattern set up in other boards and I see no reason why it should not be done because under the present bill these directors are appointed for a term of 5 years by the President. I see no reason why we should set up some board here the complexion of which might be totally of the party in power. I think it ought to be like the other boards.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer a correcting amendment that will take care of the situation to which the distinguished chairman has referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request from the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REES: On page 13, line 21, insert "not more than four members of the board shall be from the same political party."

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I think that takes care of the criticism of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, I made a statement to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] that there was an amendment on the desk relating to the period of time granted to the Corporation to dispose of certain machinery in connection with the operation of the rum plant. I have not heard that referred to and I do not want it overlooked. I wonder if it is still on the desk?

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an amendment to section 9?

Mr. REDDEN. I do not know the section, but I do not want it to come up too late because that was understood in a general way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, has called off the sections and asked whether any amendments were to be offered. We are now on section 9 for the purpose of entertaining any amendments to be offered to that section.

Are there any other amendments to section 9? If not, are there any amendments to section 10?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to be assured, in view of the tacit agreement with the chairman of the subcommittee, as to what place he proposes to offer an amendment to provide for the orderly disposition of the machinery and equipment that will be owned by this Corporation which it cannot pass to its successor? I think a very fair question was raised as precipitated by the adoption of an amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana. If we are going by that amendment to force the Virgin Islands Company out of the rum business, and that is what you voted to do, there ought to be some provision in this bill for an orderly disposition of that plant. The distinguished gentleman, Mr. Redden, assured me at the time that an amendment would be offered to take care of that situation.

Now, I simply ask the question. We are now on section 10 which provides for transfer of the property to the new corporation from the old one. Is that the section to which the gentleman will offer the amendment?

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, in order that the question might not be overlooked, I addressed the Chair a few moments ago. The Clerk stated that there is an amendment to that effect offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES]. Of course, as the gentleman knows, that amendment will have to be offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

As the gentleman knows, of course, the amendment will have to be called up by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES]. I am just wondering if he intends to do that.

Mr. KEEFE. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas, who is here. There should be an amendment which will provide for the orderly disposition of the property, the factory, and the machinery, and so on, utilized in the rum-making business by the present Virgin Islands Company.

Mr. REES. In reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin, I might say that I have at the Clerk's desk an amendment very similar to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana, which simply said they should go out of the rum business by 1951. But I have been assured on the floor of this House by the Chairman of the Subcommittee in charge of the bill, that such an amendment was being submitted; and, assuming that the amendment would be offered I did not prepare one.

Mr. KEEFE. Thus it appears that there is no amendment pending on the Clerk's desk prepared by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. I wonder if the gentleman's attention has been directed to subparagraph 8 (f) of section 4 which authorizes this Corporation to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of property which comes under its control? And I wonder if that is not sufficient authority to authorize the Corporation to dispose of this plant?

Mr. KEEFE. I may say to the gentleman from New York that I understand that that general language is the language whch is usually found in the charter of most corporations, and I did not think that it was by any chance put into this bill for the purpose of covering the situation that has now developed as a result of the adoption of the Allen amendment. Under any interpretation of the law it would be my position that it was not so intended or in contemplation at the time the bill was first written.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. REDDEN. I believe the gentleman's interpretation is correct, at the time the bill was written the Allen amendment was not in mind. Under that they are prohibited from engaging in the manufacture of rum. For that reason there can be no alternative but to dispose of the property.

Mr. KEEFE. As long as the record is clear, the legislative record made by the Congress as to the interpretation of this language is clear, that is what I want to make sure of. I understand now that the position of the committee is that having adopted the Allen amendment you consider that the bill as presently written contains sufficient language to authorize the new Corporation which gets possession of that property under the terms of this bill to dispose of it and do away with it in an orderly process of liquidation.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. PETERSON. That would be the way I would construe the bill in the present situation. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], I understood, had an amendment, which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REDDEN] referred to. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] offered an amendment which was adopted. The gentleman from Kansas did not follow up with his amendment. Under the general language of the bill they have ample authority to dispose of the property.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. REES. I have an amendment at the Clerk's desk which I believe will take care of the situation we have been discussing.

Mr. KEEFE. As far as my inquiry is concerned, the assurance of the chairman of the committee—and I take it that is the attitude also of the ranking minority member of the committee—that there is sufficient authority in the bill now to liquidate this property in an orderly manner and dispose of it without additional new language.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the gentleman so understand it?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I can appreciate the gentleman's position in this but I will have to make this observation in self-defense: The rum industry is down on its knees at the moment; there is no market for rum; many companies are facing receivership, and I do not know how you can go out today and sell a rum plant in an orderly way as far as financial procedure is concerned. You could do it in an orderly way as far as the legal technicalities are concerned.

Mr. KEEFE. You could probably be able to sell it as junk; you could at least sell it for whatever you might get out of it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes. If by "orderly manner" that is what the gentleman means.

Mr. KEEFE. I assume that this Corporation that we are setting up under this new business management will certainly have the authority. That is all I wanted to know, that you were not going to leave this property hanging up there in the air with nobody in charge of it when that situation comes about.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 10?

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REES: Page 15, line 21, after the period, insert "Provided further, That all investments and property which relate directly to the making of rum shall be sold or discontinued on or before July 1, 1951."

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. The committee on this side will be glad to accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. REES. I appreciate the gentlemen's statement.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have just stated that the rum industry is not very profitable at the present time.

Mr. REES. It never has been profitable using the Government's money, the taxpayers' money, to make rum.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I will talk a little business sense. The rum industry is not profitable now. This is no time to ask a board of directors to sell a plant, and my business judgment is such that I have to oppose the amendment.

Mr. REES. Under my amendment you will have until July 1951 to get out of the rum business and dispose of whatever equipment may be owned by the Government that is being used for that purpose.

The distinguished member of this committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] has just told us that the rum industry is not profitable, so the sooner the better we get out of the rum business financially or otherwise.

Under my amendment, as I said before, you will have more than a year during which to dispose of this equipment. The amendment is in line with the suggestions that have been made this afternoon by other Members, including the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. REES) there were—ayes 9, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other amendments to section 10?

Are there any amendments to section 11?

The Clerk will report the committee amendments to section 12.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment On page 17, line 18, strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "Representative of the President of the United States."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD to the committee amendment: Strike out "representative of the President of the United States" and insert "designee of the President of the United States as provided in section 1."

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, we accept that amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 18, line 6, after the word "payments" insert a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That the payments authorized by this section shall not include payments in lieu of income taxes, capital stock taxes, or franchise taxes."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 13?

Are there any amendments to section 14?

Are there any amendments to section 15?

If not, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JACKSON of Washington, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2989) to incorporate the Virgin Islands Corporation, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 185, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLSON) there were—ayes 115, noes 11.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 273, nays 62, not voting 96, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PHILLIPS of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article on Mother's Day by Dr. C. E. B. Ward.

Mr. BEALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article appearing in the Washington Post.

Mr. SANBORN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. McGREGOR asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include a newspaper article.

Mr. CHURCH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include in each an editorial.

COMMUNISM IN AMERICA

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, information furnished us by FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover and the Un-American Activities Committee of Congress discloses there are approximately 825,000 American Communists and fellow-travelers in our own country, who would be spies, traitors, or saboteurs in time of war.

This morning we are informed that recent investigations of the FBI reveal that 8,881 employees have been dismissed from the Federal service within the last few months as a result of loyalty investigations. In the State Department alone the investigation brought to light 21 persons suspected of Soviet espionage, 45 members of the Communist Party, and 108 suspected of subversion. We are informed the Soviet Union and its satellites have 102 persons on the United Nations pay roll in New York City and nearby Lake Success. One of its members is now held on a suspicion of espionage. Communist leaders in the United States have joined in the declaration that in a conflict between the Soviet Union and this Country, they would support the Soviet Union.

We all recall that last fall President Truman and various candidates for Congress, including my opponent from the Seventeenth District of Ohio, ridiculed the Congressional spy investigation as a "red herring" designed to divert attention from the record of the Eightieth Congress. Mr. Speaker, the facts now disclosed would lead me to say the "red herring" of 1948 has reddened faces in 1949.

In my opinion, the Communists in America are traitors, agents of a foreign power. Mr. Speaker, their aim is sedition, espionage and treason and I believe a definite decision must be made by our Government at once and strong measures taken to protect our American way of life. It seems ridiculous to me to ask our American taxpayers to continue to pay high taxes in order to send money and materials to Europe to fight communism—approximately $28,000,000,000 sent since the closing of the war—and, at the same time, pamper and allow communism to spread here in our own country.

I contend, as I did during the recent campaign, that communism in America is not a "red herring," it is a menace and definite action should be taken to protect us against the invasion of communism. We have no place in this country for those who do not believe in the advantages of our free enterprise system and the blessings of American freedom.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from a constituent.

Mr. FEIGHAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include a letter to the editor.

UNIFORM CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 201 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4080) to unify, consolidate, revise, and codify the Articles of War, the Articles for the Government of the Navy, and the disciplinary laws of the Coast Guard and to enact and establish a Uniform Code of Military Justice. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order a bill which has been reported from the Committee on Armed Services. It aims to unify, revise, and codify the Articles of War, the Articles for the Government of the Navy, and the disciplinary laws of the Coast Guard, and to enact and establish a Uniform Code of Military Justice. I know that will be pleasing and acceptable to all of us. The rule provides for 3 hours' general debate, and the bill will then be taken up, as usual, under the 5-minute rule. It is an extremely important bill, but the most important part, to my mind, is the section providing for a special Court of Military Appeals, which shall consist of three members to be appointed by the President, two of one party, and the third of the other party, which would have jurisdiction in all matters, instead of, as heretofore, having such matters under the control of the gentlemen of the Army and the Navy. I need not remind you of the many complaints that we have heard, and that the country has heard, relative to the unfair treatment accorded to enlisted men by those gentlemen. The gentlemen to be appointed to this court will be civilians, and will be appointed for life tenure. The salary will be comparable to that of a United States Court of Appeals justice. I think this legislation is a step in the right direction. In view of the fact that the extremely able chairman of the committee is present, as well as the members of his committee, who have heard the evidence, I know that they are in a much better position than I am to explain the bill in detail.

From what I have read of the bill and the evidence before our committee, I have come to the conclusion that it is a meritorious bill and really deserving of the unanimous support of the Members of the House who believe in justice to those who frequently get themselves in a little trouble, not because of their own fault, but because they disobeyed some of the unfair and arbitrary orders that some of these generals and colonels gave them, orders which they sincerely felt they were not obligated to comply with and which they felt were not germane to their draft status. But be that as it may, in this case those men will get justice in the future which has been denied them in the past.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CHELF). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS].

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time on the rule on this side. I yield back my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, if there are no requests for time, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4080) to unify, consolidate, revise, and codify the Articles of War, the Articles for the Government of the Navy, and the disciplinary laws of the Coast Guard, and to enact and establish a Uniform Code of Military Justice.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4080, with Mr. LANHAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] is recognized for 1½ hours.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, after 5 weeks of careful study on the part of the subcommittee, of which the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS] was chairman, that subcommittee reached a unanimous conclusion, and that was unanimously approved by the full committee.

This subcommittee has done an outstanding job. For 5 weeks the committee conducted hearings, oftentimes working 6 days a week.

This bill is endorsed and recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. It is approved by the National Military Establishment. It is approved by the administration, and it is unanimously approved, as I have said, by the Armed Services Committee.

No member of the committee is better qualified to explain this bill than the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS], and the other members of his subcommittee. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am turning this bill over for explanation to the distinguished and learned gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS]. I yield the gentleman such time as he desires to use.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the chairman of the committee for the kind words he has said on behalf of the subcommittee which handled this bill. In the handling of the bill we always have the full cooperation of the chairman of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON.] A number of times we had to appeal to him for guidance. He was always most cooperative. I feel that the cooperation he gave this subcommittee has gone a long way to make our labors pleasant and effective.

Mr. Chairman, to every member of the subcommittee, I wish to pay a personal tribute. The hearings by this committee, although extending over weeks, as the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], has stated, oftentimes running 6 days a week and working late into Saturday afternoons, presented the unusual situation that instead of there being a falling off of attendance as the work went on, the attendance increased until during the last week of the hearings it was larger than at any previous time. All members of the committee participated actively in drafting this legislation, and it certainly was a most happy situation which presented itself when we finally voted on the bill and found every member of the committee in favor of it as reported, and all parts of it.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the proposed legislation is to establish a uniform code of military justice.

In July of 1948, Secretary of Defense Forrestal appointed a special committee to draft a uniform code of military justice, uniform in substance and uniform in interpretation and construction, to be equally applicable to all of the armed forces. Prof. Edmund Morgan, Jr., of the Harvard Law School, was designated chairman, the remainder of the committee being Assistant Secretary of the Army Gordon Gray, Under Secretary of the Navy John Kenney and Assistant Secretary of the Air Force Eugene Zukert. Supplementing the efforts of the main committee was a working group of approximately 15 persons, including officer representatives of each of the services and five civilian lawyers with service experience, under the chairmanship of Mr. Felix Larkin, assistant general counsel in the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

During the 7-month study which was conducted, the Morgan Committee and the working group considered the Revised Articles of War, the Articles for the Government of the Navy, the Federal Code, the penal codes of various States and voluminous reports on military and naval justice which have been made in recent years by various distinguished persons. The end result of this combined effort was H. R. 2498, a bill to provide a Uniform Code of Military Justice.

After 3 weeks of preliminary preparation, the committee conducted hearings 6 days a week for almost 5 weeks, during which time a total of 28 witnesses testified. They included representatives of the four major veterans' organizations, four bar associations, including the American Bar Association, the Reserve Officers Association, the National Guard Bureau and the National Guard Association, the Under Secretary of the Navy, the Assistant Secretary of the Air Force and numerous other well-qualified witnesses. Upon the conclusion of all testimony the subcommittee gave detailed consideration to each article and section of this bill. Their deliberations, exclusive of two executive sessions, are embodied in a transcript of 1542 pages. As a result of committee amendments, H. R. 2498 was reintroduced. A clean bill, H. R. 4080, representing the final decisions, has been substituted for H. R. 2498.

The proposed code is presented in 14 sections and is further subdivided into 11 parts. Part 1 contains general provisions. Part 2 contains all of the provisions relating to apprehension and restraint. Part 3 pertains to nonjudicial punishment. Part 4 sets forth the jurisdiction of courts martial. Part 5 prescribes the manner of appointment and composition of courts martial. Part 6 prescribes pretrial procedure. Part 7 prescribes trial procedure. Part 8 relates to sentences by courts martial. Part 9 prescribes the provisions for appellate review. Part 10 sets forth and defines the punitive articles. Part 11 contains miscellaneous provisions. Section 1 of the bill contains 140 articles. These articles embrace all of the provisions of the proposed Uniform Code of Military Justice. The 13 remaining sections relate to the subject of military justice but are not germane to a uniform code of military justice and are, therefore, excluded from section 1 of the bill.

The proposed code is uniformly applicable in all of its parts to the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, and the Coast Guard in time of war and peace. It covers both the substantive and the procedural law governing military justice and its administration in all of the armed forces of the United States. If adopted, it will supersede the Articles of War, the Articles for the Government of the Navy and the disciplinary laws of the Coast Guard and will be the sole statutory authority for—

First. The infliction of limited disciplinary penalties for minor offenses without judicial action;

Second. The establishment of pretrial and trial procedure;

Third. The creation and constitution of three classes of courts martial corresponding to those now in existence;

Fourth. The eligibility of members of each of the courts and the qualifications of its officers and counsel;

Fifth. The review of findings and sentence and the creation and constitution of the reviewing tribunals; and Sixth. The listing and definition of offenses, redrafted and rephrased in modern legislative language.

The code, while based on the Revised Articles of War and the Articles for the Government of the Navy, is a consolidation and a complete recodification of the present statutes. Under it, personnel of the armed forces, regardless of the Department in which they serve, will be subject to the same law and will be tried in accordance with the same procedures. The provisions of section 1 of the bill will provide, for the first time in the history of this Nation, a single law for the administration of military justice in the armed forces.

Among the provisions designed to secure uniformity are the following:

First. The offenses made punishable by the code are identical for all the armed forces;

Second. The same system of courts with the same limits of jurisdiction of each court is set up in all the armed forces;

Third. The procedure for general courts martial is identical as to institution of charges, pretrial investigation, action by the convening authority, review by the board of review, and review by the court of military appeals in all the armed forces;

Fourth. The rules of procedure at the trial including modes of proof are equally applicable to all the armed forces;

Fifth. The Judge Advocates General of the three Departments are required to make uniform rules of procedure for the boards of review in each Department;

Sixth. The required qualifications for members of the court, law officer, and counsel are identical for all of the armed forces;

Seventh. The court of military appeals, which finally decides questions of law, is the court of last resort for each of the armed forces and also acts with the Judge Advocates General of the three Departments as an advisory body with a view to securing uniformity in policy and in sentences and in discovering and remedying defects in the system and its administration.

Among the provisions designed to insure a fair trial are the following:

GENERAL COURTS MARTIAL

First. A pretrial investigation is provided, at which the accused is entitled to be present with counsel to cross-examine available witnesses against him and to present evidence in his own behalf.

Second. A prohibition against referring any charge for trial which does not state an offense or is not shown to be supported by sufficient evidence.

Third. A mandatory provision for a competent, legally trained counsel at the trial for both the prosecution and the defense.

Fourth. A prohibition against compelling self-incrimination.

Fifth. Provision for equal process to accused and prosecution for obtaining witnesses and depositions and a provision allowing only the accused to use depositions in a capital case.

Sixth. A provision giving an accused enlisted man the privilege of having enlisted men as members of the court trying his case.

Seventh. A provision whereby voting on challenges, findings, and sentences is by secret ballot of the members of the court.

Eighth. A provision requiring the law officer to instruct the court on the record concerning the elements of the offense, presumption of innocence, and the burden of proof.

Ninth. A provision for an automatic review of the trial record for errors of law and of fact by a board of review with the right of the accused to be represented by legally competent counsel.

Tenth. A prohibition against receiving pleas of guilty in capital cases.

Eleventh. A provision for the review of the record for errors of law by the court of military appeals. This review is automatic in cases where the sentence is death or involves a general or flag rank officer. A review may be requested by petition on the part of the accused in any sentence involving confinement of 1 year or more.

SPECIAL AND SUMMARY COURTS MARTIAL

Under present law and procedure there is great variation in the nomenclature, composition, procedure and powers of the intermediate military courts. This bill completely eradicates all of those differences and establishes complete uniformity.

The foregoing constitutes a general summary of the provisions of this bill. However, there are a few provisions which gave the committee much concern and to which the witnesses devoted a majority of their testimony, an explanation of those provisions being as follows:

Article 2, subdivision (2), of the bill, as introduced, apparently conferred very wide jurisdiction over Reserve personnel. Technically speaking, Reserve personnel in uniform or even when taking a correspondence course would have been subject to the jurisdiction of this code. While we do not feel that the Armed Forces desired such wide latitude, we were unanimous in the decision that the jurisdiction should be limited by statute and not left to regulations. Therefore, we substituted an entirely new subdivision which we feel is entirely proper. You will note that Reserve personnel do not become subject to this code when on inactive duty training unless such training is pursuant to written orders which are voluntarily accepted and which specifically state that the acceptance of such orders will subject that particular Reserve to the provisions of this code.

The original provisions of article 3 (a) provided for a continuing jurisdiction by the military over persons who had returned to an inactive-duty status but had committed an offense against military law while on an active-duty status. The Reserve components voiced strenuous objection to such proposals and it is admitted that those proposals went much further than existing law. As a matter of fact, the military authorities have been most reluctant to prosecute the average offender who succeeds in returning to a civilian status before the discovery of his crime. On the other hand, the military authorities have found themselves confronted with a lack of jurisdiction to try certain aggravated cases of this character. You will recall the Durant jewel case. That case involved the theft of the crown jewels of Hesse. At the time, Mrs. Durant, one of the accused, was apprehended, she was in a terminal-leave status. The point was raised by a petition for a writ of habeas corpus that the Army had ceased to have jurisdiction over the accused since her active service was terminated and she was only completing the unexpired portion of her terminal leave. A writ of habeas corpus was granted in District Court but ultimately reversed on the theory that the terminal-leave status is a service status and subjects one to the Articles of War. If charges and specifications had not been served on the accused until after the expiration of her terminal leave, neither the military nor our Federal courts would have had any jurisdiction over the case. You will also recall the more recent Hershberg case. Hershberg was a Navy enlisted man who allegedly abused other American military personnel who were under his supervision while they were all prisoners of war of the Japanese. Hershberg's term of enlistment expired and after 1 day he reenlisted. The Navy then attempted to prosecute him for the alleged abuse of American persons. A writ of habeas corpus was granted in that case, not because it would be unconstitutional to provide for a continuing jurisdiction in such cases, but because the present Navy statute confers no such continuing jurisdiction.

We felt that there was a solution to this problem and our proposed solution is offered in article 3 (a) which is a committee amendment to H. R. 2498. It provides for a continuing jurisdiction provided the offense against this code is punishable by confinement of 5 years or more and provided further that the offense is not triable in a State or Federal Court of the United States. We feel that this will provide ample protection against any capricious action on the part of military authorities, will limit military jurisdiction to serious offenses that could not otherwise be tried by military or Federal courts and will likewise correct the absurd situation of permitting an honorable discharge to operate as a bar to a prosecution for murder or other serious offenses.

Article 15 replaces the present provisions of the Navy for Navy and Coast Guard mast punishment and the present provisions of the Army and Air Force for disciplinary punishment by commanding officers. We were of the opinion that a 50 percent pay forfeiture for 3 months was an excessive penalty for disciplinary infractions by officers. Therefore, we reduce the maximum forfeiture from 3 months to 1 month. We likewise disagreed with the original provisions of this article which permitted a forfeiture of one-half of an enlisted person's pay for 1 month. Enlisted persons are in a far different pay status than officers and we do not feel that a pay forfeiture is appropriate as punishment for disciplinary infractions by enlisted persons.

This article also provided for confinement for not to exceed seven consecutive days and confinement on bread and water or diminished rations for a period not to exceed five consecutive days. The Army and the Air Force have never used confinement, with or without bread and water, as a disciplinary punishment. On the contrary, it is a provision of long-standing in the Navy and Coast Guard. We are of the opinion that this type of disciplinary punishment should not be used ashore. However, we recognize that disciplinary matters aboard ship present an entirely different problem. Accordingly, we have authorized confinement for 7 days or confinement on bread and water or diminished rations for not to exceed 5 days when imposed upon a person attached to or embarked in a vessel. In view of the fact that Army and Air Force personnel are stationed throughout the world and must necessarily spend a portion of their time aboard ship in reaching or returning from such stations, it is intended that the present provisions for confinement on bread and water shall not be restricted to Navy enlisted personnel but shall be equally applicable to all other enlisted personnel of the Armed Forces when attached to or embarked in a vessel. As a result of our amendments we have achieved uniformity in the types of disciplinary punishments which may be adjudged.

Article 26 provides the authority for a law officer of a general court martial. Under existing law the Navy has no law officer. The Army and Air Force do have a law officer for general courts martial who, in addition to ruling upon points of evidence, retires, deliberates, and votes with the court on the findings and sentence. Officers of equal experience on this subject are sharply divided in their opinion as to whether or not the law officer should retire with the court and vote as a member. In view of the fact that the law officer is empowered to make final rulings on all interlocutory questions of law, except on a motion to dismiss and a motion relating to the accused's sanity, and in view of the fact that the law officer will now instruct the court upon the presumption of innocence, burden of proof and elements of the offense, we feel that he should not retire with the court with the voting privileges of a member of the court. Article 26, in our opinion, contains the appropriate provisions on this matter.

Article 67 contains the most revolutionary changes which have ever been incorporated in our military law. Under existing law all appellate review is conducted solely within the military departments. This has resulted in widespread criticism by the general public, who, with or without cause, look with suspicion upon all things military and particularly matters involving military justice. Every Member of Congress, both present and past, is well aware of the validity of this statement. The original bill provided for the establishment of a judicial council to be composed of at least three members. In view of the fact that this is to be a judicial tribunal and to be the court of last resort for courts-martial cases, except for the constitutional right of habeas corpus, we concluded that it should be designated by a more appropriate name. We likewise questioned the number of members to be provided. As a consequence we have substituted a new subdivision (a) which establishes the Court of Military Appeals, consisting of three members who shall be appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Such appointees must be members of a State or Federal bar, shall hold office during good behavior and receive the same compensation, allowances, and retirement benefits as judges of the United States courts of appeals. We must frankly admit that it is impossible to ascertain with any degree of accuracy the case load which this tribunal must consider. You will note under subdivision (b) that it shall review the records of, first, cases affecting a general or flag rank or including the death sentence; second, cases which the Judge Advocate General may forward on his own motion, and, third, all cases reviewed by a Board of Review in which, upon petition of the accused and on good cause shown, the court has granted a review. Rather than provide for a greater number of members than three for the Court of Military Appeals, we have concluded that it would be sounder to limit the number to three until such time as the facts may warrant an increase in number. The article as presently written embodies those conclusions.

Perhaps the most troublesom question which we have considered is the question of command control. Under existing law commanding officers refer the charges in general, special, and summary courts martial and convene the courts; they appoint the members of the court, law officer for general courts and counsel for trial; and, retain full power to set aside findings of guilty and modify or change the sentence, but are not permitted to interfere with verdicts of not guilty nor to increase the severity of any sentence imposed. We have preserved these elements of command in this bill. On the other hand, we have included numerous restrictions on command. The bill provides that the convening authority may not refer charges for trial until they are examined for legal sufficiency by the staff judge advocate or legal officer; authorizes the staff judge advocate or legal officer to communicate directly with the Judge Advocate General; requires all counsel at a general court-martial trial to be lawyers or law graduates and, in addition, to be certified as qualified by the Judge Advocate General; provides a law officer who must be a lawyer whose ruling on interlocutory questions of law will be final and binding on the court and who must instruct the court on the presumption of innocence, burden of proof and the elements of the offense charged; provides that the staff judge advocate of the convening authority must examine the record of trial for sufficiency before the convening authority can act on a finding or sentence; provides legally qualified appellate counsel for an accused before a Board of Review and the Court of Military Appeals; establishes a civilian court of military appeals, completely removed from all military influence or persuasion; and makes it a court-martial offense for any person subject to this code to unlawfully influence the action of a court martial.

Able and sincere witnesses urged our committee to remove the authority to convene courts martial from command and place that authority in judge advocates or legal officers, or at least in a superior command. We fully agreed that such a provision might be desirable if it were practicable, but we are of the opinion that it is not practicable. We cannot escape the fact that the law which we are now writing will be as applicable and must be as workable in time of war as in time of peace, and, regardless of any desires which may stem from an idealistic conception of justice, we must avoid the enactment of provisions which will unduly restrict those who are responsible for the conduct of our military operations. Our conclusions in this respect are contrary to the recommendations of numerous capable and respected witnesses who testified before our committee, but the responsibility for the choice was a matter which had to be resolved according to the dictates of our own conscience and judgment.

It may not be generally known, but there is no requirement under present law that the Judge Advocate General of any of the services be a qualified lawyer. We think that that is a deficiency which should be corrected. In view of these conclusions, we have added a new section to the bill which appears as section 13. You will note that it requires that the Judge Advocates General must be members of a Federal or State bar, must be judge advocates or law specialists, and must have at least 8 years' accumulative experience in a Judge Advocates Corps, Department, or Office, the last 3 years of which, prior to appointment, must be consecutive. Now, in order that there may be no misunderstanding by either the Navy or the Air Force, we point out that we are fully aware that the Navy has a number of unrestricted line officers who have law degrees and may qualify as law specialists as well as officers of the line. We do not intend that such officers shall be precluded from becoming Judge Advocates General as a result of this section. We do, however, insist that all Judge Advocates General be legally qualified, with a prescribed amount of experience, and that a substantial portion of that experience be obtained immediately prior to appointment to the Office of the Judge Advocate General.

If the Navy or the Air Force have officers who are not law specialists or judge advocates but are otherwise qualified under this section, they are not precluded from designating such officers as judge advocates or law specialists immediately prior to appointment. It is to be hoped, however, that neither the Navy or the Air Force will continue to relegate their legal personnel to positions of lesser importance and dignity than their counterparts in the line. We think it entirely sound and proper that the judge advocates general be chosen from those who have sacrificed the prerogatives of the line officer in order to follow a legal career in the services. We hope to see some revised thinking on this subject and will view future developments with interest.

In addition to the committee amendments to H. R. 2498 which appear as original provisions in H. R. 4080, two substantive amendments to H. R. 4080 which are worthy of comment have been adopted by the committee. The first amendment relates to the selection of judges for the Court of Military Appeals as provided in article 67. The committee is of the opinion that it is desirable to remove every possible criticism from the proposed code and that a limitation on the number of judges who may be appointed from the same political party is not only appropriate but highly desirable. The committee has adopted such an amendment to article 67.

The second amendment pertains to Article 2, page 5, subdivision 11, beginning on line 18, and subdivision 12, beginning on line 24. You will note that subdivision 11 confers jurisdiction over all persons serving with, employed by, or accompanying the armed forces without the continental limits of the United States and certain Territories. Subdivision 12 confers jurisdiction over all persons within an area leased by the United States which is under the control of the Secretary of the Department and which is without the United States and certain Territories. It has been discovered that the United States Navy occupies certain territory in the Subic Bay region of the Philippine Islands, which territory was acquired for the use of the United States by virtue of the 1898 Treaty with Spain. This property is under the control of the Secretary of the Navy. We find that under the provisions of subdivision 12, we will have no jurisdiction over persons not otherwise subject to this Code who enter this property and commit offenses while on the property. It is considered desirable to have such jurisdiction. On the other hand, we fully recognize the fact that certain limitations have been placed upon the jurisdiction of the United States by virtue of certain treaties and agreements and that this jurisdiction may be further curtailed by future agreements. Certainly, we do not desire to arouse the suspicion of any foreign governments by the use of any language in this Code which would appear to give the armed forces jurisdiction in excess of obligations which we have already or may in the future assume by treaty or agreement. In order that our intent be made perfectly clear, we have amended subdivisions (11) and (12) with clear and unmistakable language.

The adoption of the proposed amendments in subdivisions (11) and (12) will insure that the armed forces will have jurisdiction over both leased areas and areas otherwise reserved or acquired for the use of the United States and it will also insure that such jurisdiction is subject to the limitations imposed in any treaty or agreement to which the United States is or may be a party.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that I have succeeded in my endeavor to give you and the Membership of the House an understanding of the provisions of this bill. I cannot assure you that this bill is perfect, but I can assure you that it represents the best efforts and conclusions of many sincere and able men. I urge you to join the Membership of the Armed Services Committee in securing its enactment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Under the section of the bill dealing with specific offenses where it uses the language "shall be punished as a court martial may direct," is the death sentence permissible then?

Mr. BROOKS. The death sentence must be specified in the article.

Mr. VINSON. In answer to the gentleman, I would say no, the death sentence would not be except where it is specifically stated in the article.

Mr. CURTIS. Could we have enumerated for the RECORD a statement as to those offenses where it is possible to impose the death sentence?

Mr. VINSON. They are already in the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I am aware of that.

Mr. VINSON. Does the gentleman just want them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. VINSON. We will put them in there when we read the bill for amendment. That goes in the RECORD then.

They will be enumerated in the RECORD as a part of the RECORD; however we will compile that list. It will be a pleasure to compile it.

Mr. CURTIS. That is what I would like to have.

Mr. BROOKS. There are not many instances of that sort.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Under this bill how is counsel for an accused before a general court selected?

Mr. BROOKS. Counsel for an accused before a general court?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. VINSON. That is fixed by the convening authority unless the accused hires someone else.

Mr. ELLIOTT. In other words, unless the accused hires counsel for himself he has no control over who his counsel might be?

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman is correct, he has not; but the counsel must be a well-qualified lawyer able to protect the rights of the accused. The accused is in exactly the same position as an accused in a State court. He is entitled to the benefit of counsel. If he does not hire one the court will give him the benefit of counsel. Ordinarily, the court selects well-qualified men. In this instance they will be outstanding lawyers who will be chosen as the adviser to the accused.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Are those counsel drawn from the command of the convening authority or may they be drawn from another command? In other words, how are those able lawyers obtained?

Mr. VINSON. It may be from either source. It may be anyone within a certain sphere could be called, whether it is in that particular set-up or some other set-up. In other words, you will find here for the first time in the history of this Government that written into the law is every right to protect and see that every accused in the armed services has an opportunity to have a fair and impartial trial and have the benefit of qualified people to protect his interest.

Mr. BROOKS. May I add that in my judgment and in the judgment of those who sat on the subcommittee, the accused actually has greater opportunity in a military trial under this code than he has in a civilian trial in a Federal court. His rights are abundantly protected by the restrictions which we place at various parts of this particular act.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Why do you limit the number of enlisted men to a third of the total membership of the court?

Mr. BROOKS. Because that was the number agreed upon and the number that is being used at the present time, and it has been found that that number operates nicely.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. It says "not less than one-third." As a matter of fact, it could be all. There has been one instance where all the members of the court have been enlisted men.

Mr. GROSS. Yes; but you leave a loophole here by which there may not be any enlisted men.

Mr. BROOKS. Furthermore, in the case where death is a possible punishment or where life imprisonment is a possible punishment, the enlisted man can actually control the court by virtue of having one-third or more of the court.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, in answer to the last question it is entirely optional with the accused. If he does not request enlisted men, he gets an officer court. If he requests enlisted men, he gets enlisted men.

Mr. GROSS. Even though he does request enlisted men, you leave a loophole here by which, through military exigencies, that may be impossible.

Mr. VINSON. No. If he requests in writing that he wants enlisted men on the court, at least one-third of the court must be enlisted men.

Mr. GROSS. But, you go on and say here, "whereas the persons cannot be obtained" you do have an exception right there.

Mr. VINSON. That is true. There may be instances on certain small ships on the high seas where you just cannot have them, and therefore that provision was put in there in the way it is written. It just might not be possible to get them.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Chairman, in order that the Members may have a full appreciation of the importance of the legislation which is presented here today, I consider it both advisable and necessary to relate, in a general way, the events which have brought the subject of military justice to our attention.

During the course of World War II approximately 11,000,000 men saw service in the United States Army, and of that number approximately 80,000 were convicted by general courts martial. Even before the cessation of hostilities it was apparent to the War Department and to the Congress that a detailed study of the Army system of justice was appropriate, if not mandatory. Accordingly, in 1944 and 1945, the War Department sent Col. Phillip McCook, former prominent New York jurist, to various theaters of operation to conduct such studies. Additional reports were submitted to the War Department from other sources.

Within a few months after the end of hostilities the matter was brought to the attention of the American Bar Association, and on March 25, 1946, the War Department Advisory Committee on Military Justice was appointed by order of the Secretary of War. The committee, under the chairmanship of the Honorable Arthur T. Vanderbilt, and referred to as the Vanderbilt committee, consisted of nine outstanding lawyers and Federal jurists from eight States and the District of Columbia. From March 25, 1946, until December 13, 1946, a period of almost 9 months, the members of that committee engaged in studies, investigations, and hearings, and availed themselves of voluminous statistical data of the Judge Advocate General's Department and other sources.

At full committee hearings in Washington the Secretary of War and Under Secretary of War, the Chief of Staff, the Commander of the Army Ground Forces, the Judge Advocate General, the Assistant Judge Advocate General, numerous other officers, and the representatives of five veterans' organizations were heard. There were numerous personal interviews, supplemented by letters, and the digesting of 321 answers to questionnaires from both military and nonmilitary personnel. Additional widely advertised regional public hearings were held at New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Raleigh, Atlanta, Chicago, St. Louis, Denver, San Francisco, and Seattle. The subsequent report of the committee was based on these extensive inquiries.

During the Seventy-ninth Congress, a Military Affairs Subcommittee under the chairmanship of the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. CARL T. DURHAM, devoted more than 1 year to detailed study of the Army system of justice.

Additional studies have been conducted by special committees of the American Legion, VFW, AMVETS, AVC, the New York County Lawyers' Association, the War Veterans' Bar Association, the Judge Advocate Generals' Association, and the Phi Alpha Delta law fraternity. The reports and recommendations of each of these groups were made available to the Armed Services Committee and representatives of each of the organizations appeared before the committee in public hearings in support of their recommendations. Other witnesses, who had particular knowledge of the subject by virtue of their service and experience in the recent war, were heard.

In our opinion, the combined efforts of these organizations and individuals represented the most comprehensive study of military justice ever conducted in the history of our country.

As a result of these studies and following the extensive hearings conducted during the Eightieth Congress a military justice bill for the Army was presented to the House and became law, being known as Public Law 759. The provisions of that law have largely been adopted in the bill before us today.

My able colleague the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS] has given the membership a thorough summary of the general provisions of this bill and the consideration which has been given to it. I neither desire nor intend to impose upon your patience and time with matters which are repetitious. You have already been advised of the difficulty we have experienced with the problems involved in the question of command control. During the Eightieth Congress these same problems aroused our interest and we devoted a great deal of time in an endeavor to determine the best solution. With your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, I want to elaborate on this matter because I believe it involves one of the most fundamental issues in military justice, and I shall for the present confine myself to this phase of the proposed legislation.

Two years ago today a subcommittee, of which I was chairman, considered the same problems of command control which were raised during our consideration of this bill.

What is command control?

It is a term which conscientious critics use to describe the present authority of commanding officers to appoint and control courts-martial. The appointment of courts-martial, including the members of the court, the trial counsel, defense counsel and law officer has always been a function of command. We did not disturb that authority 2 years ago and we have not disturbed it in this bill. I am well aware of the fact that this authority has been abused but I think such abuse is exceptional rather than general. Unfortunately we never hear reports which point out the accomplishments of military justice. We hear nothing but the complaints. It is my honest opinion that the accomplishments far outweigh the deficiencies and I oppose any proposals which would disorganize a system which has worked since 1776 in order to correct an occasional abuse.

It has been suggested that a judge advocate officer or a superior command appoint the members of a court martial from a panel. Now who would select that panel? I think it is inevitable that the same officer who selects the court under the present system would select the panel under the proposed system. Not only would you gain nothing, you would inject another delay into a system of justice which must be swift if it is to be effective.

We have preserved the right of commanding officers to appoint courts martial but we have provided numerous safeguards over that authority. In my opinion, one of the most effective safeguards which we have adopted is the provision which sets up mandatory qualifications for the trial counsel, defense counsel, and the law officer. These provisions are set out in articles 26 and 27 and they require that all prosecution and defense counsel in every general courts-martial case be at least graduates of an accredited law school and that the law officer must be a member of a State or Federal bar.

It was inevitable that these mandatory requirements, which are new, should lead us into a discussion of the merits of a separate Judge Advocate General's Corps for each of the services. During the Eightieth Congress I offered the amendments which created a separate Judge Advocate General's Corps in the Department of the Army. Those provisions became effective on February 1. So today the Army has a separate Judge Advocate General's Corps with a separate promotion list while the Navy and the Air Force do not.

Practically every witness who testified before our committee, except departmental witnesses, urged us to create separate corps for the Navy and the Air Force. The Navy and the Air Force strenuously opposed those proposals. Frankly, I have been an advocate for a separate legal corps for each of the services, but, for two reasons, I have refrained from urging those proposals in the present legislation. Our committee came to the conclusion that since we now have a Judge Advocate Corps in the Army, and since the Court of Military Appeals will have an opportunity to review the comparative results of the Army with its corps as against the Navy and Air Force without such a corps, that we should permit the services to operate under their present different plans until such time as we may be able to factually determine the best method of operation. I think that can be done within 1 year after the effective date of the proposed legislation. The second consideration which prompted me to reach this decision is to be found in the provisions of section 13 of the bill. This is a new section and is a committee amendment which has been unanimously adopted by the Armed Services Committee. As Mr. Brooks has already pointed out, there is no requirement today that a Judge Advocate General of any of the armed forces must be a lawyer. It is unthinkable to me that there have been no mandatory legal qualifications for the respective Judge Advocates General, who are the legal advisers of the Secretaries. Section 13 closes that gap. Not only does it require that the Judge Advocates General be legally qualified and be members of a State or Federal bar, it requires that they must have at least 8 years cumulative legal experience in the Judge Advocate General's Corps, Department, or Office and that the last 3 years of this service, immediately prior to appointment, be consecutive.

While I have not been directly informed by the Air Force, I am advised that these new provisions are entirely acceptable to the Air Force. I hear a few rumblings from the Navy. However, I have heard no complaint from the Secretary of the Navy or the Chief of Naval Operations who are fully aware of this committee amendment. I must point out that the Officer Personnel Act of 1947 created the position of Law Specialist in the Navy. These law specialists must be lawyers and there are more than 241 of them in the Navy today. They are the backbone of the Navy legal system but they are forbidden to command at sea and can exercise command ashore only when authorized by the Secretary of the Navy. These officers, many of whom are Annapolis graduates, have surrendered the prerogatives of command in order to follow a legal career in the service. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that these men are entitled to the right to become the Judge Advocate General of the Navy. They aparently have that right today but I can assure you that it does not work out that way in practice. The office of Judge Advocate General in the Navy is a position which is now reserved for line officers of the Navy who have acquired a legal education. Their first love is the sea and the office of Judge Advocate General is just another convenient position where they may obtain a spot promotion from captain to admiral. Now do not misunderstand me. The unrestricted line officers of the Navy are capable and highly respected officers. They are a credit to the Navy. But I hope you will agree with me that it is not necessary to know how to command a battleship or a submarine in order to administer the system of justice in the Department of the Navy.

Upon the basis of these considerations, Mr. Chairman, I fully endorse the legislation which is before you. I sincerely believe that its enactment will provide the most enlightened system of military justice that has ever been enacted.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. In article IV, under "Dismissed officers right to trial by court martial," suppose the officer is not guilty after having been dismissed by the court martial? According to this bill the Secretary of the Department shall substitute for the dismissal order by the President a form of discharge authorized for administrative issuance. Why is not this officer issued an honorable discharge as all other soldiers are?

Mr. ELSTON. He would not be given any kind of discharge from the service if he had a good record.

Mr. GROSS. But if he has been dismissed and found not guilty, why should he not be given an honorable discharge?

Mr. ELSTON. I do not think the law says that on acquittal he is given any kind of discharge.

Mr. GROSS. It says the Secretary of the Department shall substitute for the dismissal order by the President a form of discharge authorized for administrative issuance.

Mr. ELSTON. That is where the dismissal has been ordered by the President.

Mr. GROSS. Is this a special discharge?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes; that is an administrative type of discharge that he may be given where there is an order of dismissal by the President. And not in the case of an acquittal. A man acquitted would not be discharged by any type of discharge in any of the services.

Mr. GROSS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the committee is to consider the problems involved in providing the best possible system of justice for the members of our armed forces.

There is nothing novel in our purpose. In fact, George Washington faced exactly the same problem in 1774 when he began the formation of his army to fight for the independence of this Nation. He recognized the necessity to obtain absolute authority for the control of his troops if he was to have a disciplined army rather than an uncontrollable mob. At that time the British system of military justice was perhaps the most enlightened system in the civilized world. General Washington adopted it, word for word.

The authority to perpetuate this type of law was subsequently incorporated in article 1 of the Constitution. With minor changes that same system endured down through the years, even through World War I. The Congress revised the system in 1920 and those of you who were Members of the Eightieth Congress will recall that we accomplished a very substantial revision of the Articles of War in H. R. 2575. Time did not permit us to accomplish a similar revision of the Articles for the Government of the Navy. As a consequence, the Navy system, the main portion of which was adopted in 1862, has endured until this very moment with only minor changes.

Now, why should we be so concerned with this problem?

The answer can be expressed in just a few words but they are grimly serious words.

During the last war more than 15,000,000 Americans served in our armed forces. Many of them were just youngsters whose first experience with any system of law was with the military system of law.

In the Army alone more than 90,000 of these young men were convicted by general courts martial. It is safe to assume that a very large number of them have returned to civilian life with dishonorable discharges.

Of far more serious consequence is the fact that 141 of these young men were executed. They paid for their military crimes with their lives.

Unfortunately, the problem was not solved by the cessation of hostilities. Even with our reduced forces there are almost 1,200 general courts-martial trials in the Armed Forces every month.

And so I say, Mr. Chairman, the problem which confronts us demands our serious consideration. I can assure you that the bill which is now before you has received that type of consideration, and this fact prompts me to pay tribute where tribute is due.

I am sure you will all agree that the technical provisions of a bill of this character are about as difficult and uninteresting as the formula for atomic energy. Many of you will also agree that sometimes they are almost as explosive.

To state it very simply, the preparation of this legislation has involved efforts that can best be characterized as plain drudgery. A subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee, under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS] began its consideration of this bill on last February 8. The eight lawyers and three laymen of that subcommittee conducted lengthy and difficult hearings for many weeks before reporting the bill to the full committee on April 27.

I am well aware of the conscientious and difficult service which those gentlemen have performed.

I take this opportunity not only to pay my personal tribute to each of them but to commend their splendid efforts to the Members of the House.

The bill proposes to establish a uniform code of military justice, equally applicable to all of the armed forces. I do not mean to say that every department within the armed forces is thoroughly satisfied with all of the provisions of the bill. When you stop to consider that they have gone their respective ways for more than 160 years, it is not surprising that they would be reluctant to surrender or alter provisions with which they are familiar. Each of the services has made concessions, reluctantly in some instances, but the results which have been achieved fully justify those concessions.

Now, in order to avoid any misunderstanding, I want to point out that no question of unification is involved in this bill. This bill does accomplish uniformity. And if there is any field of military endeavor which is susceptible to uniformity, this is it.

The enactment of the proposed legislation will provide uniformity in types and definition of offenses, pretrial procedure, the number and types of courts and the number and qualifications of the members of each court; the qualifications of trial counsel, defense counsel, and law officer; trial procedure and modes of proof; and authorized punishments and appellate review.

This is a remarkable accomplishment and one which is long past due.

During your consideration of this legislation, I caution you to keep in mind one fundamental proposition which can best be raised by a question.

Now, why was this bill assigned to the Armed Services Committee rather than to the Judiciary Committee?

The answer lies in the fact that life in the armed forces differs from civilian life.

The objective of the civilian society is to make people live together in peace and in reasonable happiness. The object of the armed forces is to win wars.

This being so, military institutions necessarily differ from civilian institutions. Many military offenses are acts that would be rights in the civilian society.

Every American cherishes his right to tell off the boss. But the same act in the military is an offense.

In civilian life, if you do not like your job you quit. The same act in the military constitutes desertion and, in time of war, may be punished by death.

In civilian life, a group of workers may walk off the job in protest. In the armed forces that act is mutiny and may be punished by death.

These examples point out and emphasize the fundamental difference between civilian society and the military. They are differences which must be preserved.

Now, this very fact prompts me to offer this word of caution.

Our problem stems from our desire to create an enlightened system of military justice which not only preserves and protects the rights of the members of our armed forces, but also recognizes the sole reason for the existence of a military establishment—the winning of wars.

It is my sincere belief that those concepts are fully recognized in the legislation which is now before you.

This bill is the result of honest endeavor by sincere and capable men. I highly commend it to you.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM].

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, this is a subject that I have been deeply interested in for the past 8 years, and one with which I was deeply concerned, as a member of the old Committee on Military Affairs, which made a report on this matter. I suppose that this subject has probably had the attention of the ablest counsel and the ablest lawyers and has received more attention than any other subject that has ever come before this body in a long, long time. The first committee that we worked with was the so-called Vanderbilt committee, which was composed of 12 able lawyers. Then the American Bar Association also appointed a committee, which did a great deal of work. Much work was done by the War Department by several able lawyers. Therefore, this over-all question, which is before us today, in my opinion, has had as much study and going over, in the way of trying to work out what we feel would be an efficient and good administrative military justice bill than any other subject that I have ever had anything to do with, either on the Committee on Armed Services, or on the old Committee on Military Affairs.

I just want to point out some of the things that the Vanderbilt committee recommended to the Seventy-ninth Congress:

He has gone into this matter thoroughly on the basis of the studies that were made before, convinced that if we were to have another war such as we have just gone through we would not have the criticism that faced us at that time both through the press and over the radio. It became so bad that we had to pay some attention to it, and General Eisenhower himself appointed the first committee to go into this matter, and later Secretary Patterson, and later Secretary Royall.

The limitations and inadequacies of our system of military and naval justice were graphically portrayed to the public and to Members of Congress during and after World War II by many service men and women, lawyers and laymen alike, who had had first-hand experience with the operation of such systems, and found that resemblance between them and the courts which they knew as civilians was largely coincidental. It was disturbing to them to find that the same official was empowered to accuse, to draft and direct the charges, to select the prosecutor and defense counsel from the officers under his command, to choose the members of the court, to review and alter their decision, and to change any sentence imposed. They were shocked to learn that an offense committed by an officer was subject to different treatment and punishment than the identical offense committed by an enlisted man. They were surprised to find that many of the judges, prosecutors, and defense counsel participating in courts martial were neither lawyers nor trained in the law, and that, in the naval services, there was not even the minimum requirement that a single law member be on a court.

The reports that came back of these things to the civilian community, together with specific instances of abuse in the court-martial process, initiated an expression of aroused public opinion which gave promise that reforms would be accomplished. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy each appointed boards of distinguished citizens to review the court-martial systems of their respective services, and to make recommendations for a thoroughgoing revision of military and naval justice. The famous Vanderbilt report, made to Secretary Patterson, and other reports, made to Secretary Forrestal, all found substance to the charges which had been leveled at the court-martial systems, and presented definitive recommendations for the elimination of the conditions which made such charges possible.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN].

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Chairman, at this late hour I will be very brief in my remarks. The previous speakers, the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS], the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ELSTON], and my esteemed and very able chairman have very fully and carefully and adequately explained this measure.

Mr. Chairman, at the very outset let me assure the House that this measure has been given exhaustive and most diligent and painstaking consideration by the subcommittee. I am happy to commend and thank my able colleague the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS] for the penetrating judgment, wisdom, patience, and sagacity which he has shown in furnishing such able leadership in the formulation of this bill. To the other members of the subcommittee, I must also extend my commendation and appreciation for a task well done.

For the information of the Members of the House, let me state that the subcommittee has among its membership some of the very best lawyers in the Congress. The honorable chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS] has distinguished himself before the bar and possesses a keen, analytical, legal mind. My distinguished friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ELSTON] has long been recognized, not only as one of the ablest civilian lawyers in the Nation, but also a specialist and outstanding expert in the field of military law. The remaining lawyers on the subcommittee are all of commanding legal ability. The members of the subcommittee who are not lawyers are all men of learning, broad experience, and conspicuous ability and are without exception thoroughly versed, deply interested, and exceptionally well-informed on the problems of military justice. Furthermore, I am happy to state to the House, our subcommittee has been most fortunate in that we have enjoyed the benefit of the advice, opinions and assistance of expert and eminent lawyers and specialists, highly qualified to grapple with these problems. To mention but a few, we have had the invaluable assistance of Professor Morgan, of the Harvard Law School; Mr. Felix Larkin, of the Department of Defense, Mr. Robert Smart, our own unexcelled professional staff member; and a great many other men who have carefully and laboriously studied every phase of the measure and related questions.

We also had the benefit of extensive testimony from military and civilian life, from high-ranking officers of the armed services, from representatives of veterans' organizations and bar associations, and others highly competent to pass upon the fundamental principles of the questions involved in the legislation. And at all times, of course, we have had the benefit of the farsighted, mature judgment of our own most distinguished and capable chairman, a man of broad knowledge and outstanding patriotism, the able gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]. These are but a few of the acknowledgments which I desire to make in connection with the discussion of the bill, which has been reported to the House by the unanimous vote of our committee.

I am sure there is not a single Member of the House who is not familiar with the background of and the demonstrated need for this legislation. Military justice has long been under fire by civilian and legal groups for its arbitrary character, its severity, and its manifest denial of constitutional safeguards generally recognized by the civil courts since the establishment of the Government. The recent war served to bring out and dramatize the defects and shortcomings of the archaic and outmoded system of military justice. I dare say that every one of us who served in this body during the war, or indeed since the war, has had occasion at some time or other to have brought forcibly to his attention some case or cases which have demonstrated the inadequacies, limitations, and absence of substantial justice which have not infrequently accompanied the trial and disposition of military legal cases. No doubt many of these cases have been grossly exaggerated and unduly exploited by those seeking to discredit our armed services and the Congress. It would be a grave error for anyone here to regard these cases as the rule rather than the exception. It would be a grave error to attribute to our military leaders, as a whole, willful and deliberate disregard for fundamental principles of justice, for the rights of officers and enlisted men, or intentional unfairness or injustice. Thousands of these cases have been handled and disposed of under wartime conditions of stress and crises and it is remarkable that there have been relatively so few cases coming to our attention which indicated glaring and shocking violations of the ordinary canons of American justice. Nevertheless we should and must move to correct a system which is not organically sound and which permits continued injustice to some.

I do not propose to enter into any long discussion of the complaints and specific allegations which have been recorded against the existing system of military justice. It suffices to say that from the evidence as we have it and know it, it seems to me and it is my considered judgment, that the conclusion is inescapable that the system needs a complete and thorough overhauling in order to bring it into line with our concepts of judicial procedure and our ideas of the administration of justice, and our long-established principles safeguarding the rights of individuals as citizens of this great Republic who happen to be in the armed forces.

This bill is carefully designed to eliminate the abuses and excesses which so unfortunately have characterized military trials and cases in the past. We have endeavored, and I think very successfully, to unify, codify, and bring up to date the Articles of War, the Articles for the Government of the Navy, the Disciplinary Laws of the Coast Guard and to enact and establish a uniform code which will insure, henceforth, substantial, complete, and speedy justice, which will secure and guarantee the rights, privileges, and immunities of American citizens of every member of the armed services from the top to the bottom, or I should say—and this is important—from the bottom to the top, because, so far as I am concerned, the Members of this Congress have a primary responsibility to safeguard and protect in every possible way the rights, the interests, the well-being and welfare of every boy and girl who is enlisted in the armed forces of our country.

This bill provides for the protection of the individual enlisted man or officer at every level and at every point. It regulates and checks arbitrary, capricious, and whimsical action of commanding officers at every level and every point. It lays down definite conditions governing apprehension and restraint, governing nonjudicial punishment, governing courts-martial jurisdiction, the appointment and composition of courts martial, pretrial procedure, trial procedure, sentences, review of court-martial decisions, and imposition of punishment.

It embraces the whole field of jurisprudence as applied to members of the armed services. It seeks to shield the accused substantially just as he is shielded by our Constitution and laws in civil courts, in most substantial particulars. We have carefully combed every possible way by which the rights of the accused have been or could be violated and have closed up any gap which we have been able to discern by which any member of the armed forces might be denied equal and full justice under the law. We have provided for full and complete specifications, for a speedy trial before competent judges, for confrontation of witnesses by the accused, for representation by qualified counsel of his own selection, if he so desires it, at every stage of the proceedings, for careful definition and codification of specific crimes and offenses, for recognition of the laws of evidence as they pertain to judicial proceedings, and for abundant and painstaking review by highly qualified experts of the findings, the evidence and finally the questions of law in a given case.

After considerable discussion and protracted debate and consideration, recognizing the desirability insofar as is practicable and consistent with the national defense and the exigencies of wartime, of the separation from strictly military control of the final determination of the legal cases in the armed services, we have set up and established in this bill a court of military appeals. This court is in effect a court of last resort similar to the United States circuit court of appeals. It consists of three civilian judges appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate and having permanent tenure just as our high ranking Federal civilian judges. This court will be completely detached from the military in every way. It is entirely disconnected with the Department of Defense or any other military branch, completely removed from any outside influences. It can operate, therefore, as I think every Member of Congress intends it should, as a great, effective, impartial body sitting at the topmost rank of the structure of military justice and insuring as near as it can be insured by any human agency, absolutely fair and unbiased consideration for every accused. Thus, for the first time this Congress will establish, if this provision is written into law, a break in command control over court-martial cases and civilian review of the judicial proceedings and decisions of the military.

There are those who believe in the establishment of a separate Judge Advocate Corps for all the services. There are those who believe in taking away a larger measure of the administration of military justice from the control of the so-called high command. These proponents have ably argued their case and I have no quarrel with their fundamental philosophy. It is soundly based on very good principles and upon historic, American, legal traditions. But the commanding officers of the armed forces must, in the last analysis, be vested with disciplinary control over their members. We cannot completely detach the trial of military cases and the handling of military offenses from the ranking officers of the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Coast Guard without destroying essential discipline and creating a veritable chaos. In brief, we must as a legislative body consider the practicalities of the broader situation which confronts us. Obviously, in our fighting forces central authority must not only be recognized, but insured. There must be some central direction and guidance and disciplinary control or we will indeed be inviting demoralization of the services.

All in all, while this bill can and will be perfected as we acquire experience and concrete results from its operation, I feel that it is on the whole a very long step in the right direction in rooting out the overbearing authoritarian spirit and lack of substantial justice which has often accompanied military procedure and insuring to the accused what we all desire, a larger measure of democratic attitude and effective procedures accomplishing substantial justice than is enjoyed by the armed forces of any other nation. Cruel and unusual punishments will be positively prohibited and maximum limits will be placed upon sentences by this bill. Undue harshness and undue severity will be abolished and a fuller measure of leniency and humane consideration will be encouraged and insured. To the extent that autocratic and hard-boiled, arrogant methods have been used in the past by any high-ranking officer in the armed services in dispensing military justice, this measure protects against such offenses in the future. It goes much further. Under this law, rigged courts and punishments dominated and dictated by the command will be absolutely prohibited and every member of the armed forces will be definitely assured of complete specifications of the offense or offenses which he is charged, a fair and impartial trial, qualified counsel, abundant expert review of his trial and case, and the utmost protection against injustice of any kind.

In short, as I interpret it, this bill, if enacted, will banish the evils of the past in the administration and substantive failures of military justice. It will insure to every member of our armed forces who may become involved in disciplinary difficulties of any kind or character, fullest opportunity to clear himself, fairest consideration at every stage of his case, fullest protection of all his rights, and honest, able, unbiased, and uncontrolled judgment of his case.

Because I believe that this bill is designed to meet a real crying need of our military organizations and because I know that it has been drawn so as to furnish the very maximum of assistance and protection to those in the armed forces who may become involved with the military law, I urge that the House adopt this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN] has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON], a very distinguished veteran, probably the most highly decorated veteran from the State of Tennessee.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services for his kind words.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not take much of the time of the Committee, for I know the hour is late and the Members are anxious to get away, but this is a very important bill. I regret that every Member of the House is not present on the floor listening to this debate and discussion. Personally, I was intending to offer a bill to take general courts martial out of the Navy because of some cases that have come to my attention recently.

I wish to commend the chairman of the subcommittee and also the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services for doing away with autocratic, arrogant, pompous command-control brass in the Army and Navy. This bill does much to take away that command control which should have been taken away years ago, in my estimation. Had they used the Pentagon Building for what it was designed, a veterans' hospital, America would have been lots better off today. I appreciate the effort that has been made by this Committee to do away with a part of that command control, and I hope this is just the first step forward toward the objective. I wanted this time, Mr. Chairman, to relate the reason why I was going to introduce the bill to take the general courts martial out of the Navy.

There is one case in particular to which I wish to call your attention, the case of Bernis Amos Richardson, boatswain's mate, second-class, United States Navy, a boy who was in the Navy during the war for 3½ years—11 battles he was in—had an unusually good record. He was a. w. o. l. for 20 minutes one time and got a summary court martial for it—a very minor offense—and this was the only thing against his record. He had reenlisted, or shipped over, as we call it in the Navy, after the war was over, for a second hitch. He was aboard a ship that came into the port of Norfolk and took shore leave. As most sailors will do—and I speak first as a sailor, but later as an officer—he went into town on liberty. This is from the record. The record discloses that he was drinking—as lots of sailors do. When he was returning home from his liberty—and he called his ship "home," he was on board a bus. The record shows that he had been drinking excessively, and this I do not doubt; but it seems that aboard this bus there was also a "90-day wonder"—and I was one myself, at one time, and I now say this apologetically, that after I finished midshipman school, with that little piece of gold braid on my arm I thought I was "the stuff," just like I can imagine this Ensign Briggs thought he was on the bus that night. It seems that Richardson was talking a little loud, and that Ensign Briggs, the "90-day wonder," told the boy to pipe down. The boy and his buddy who had been ashore with him, piped down for a little while, then they started again talking a little loud. It seems as if this ensign who went into the service after the war was over, had no military experience other than after the war had been declared over, went up to this boatswain's mate, second class—and that is a good rate in the Navy, and told Richardson, according to the record: "I am your superior officer; pipe down. Pipe down. And I mean it." One thing led to another and just as two people frequently will do, getting into a heated conversation and argument, a fight ensued. The record reveals that this boatswain's mate, along with his buddy, got into a fight with Ensign Briggs, this "90-day wonder."

Mr. Chairman, a fight ensued, and the record shows the ensign was beat up.

A general court martial was ordered, and it was composed of the following:

Capt. John W. Marts, Jr., United States Navy; Commander Charles H. Clark, United States Navy; Maj. John W. Hughes, United States Marine Corps; Lt. Comdr. Lanceford B. Pruitt, Jr., United States Naval Reserve; Lt. Comdr, Paul E. Dickson, United States Navy; Lt. James F. Donnelly, United States Navy; Lt. Harry R. Schleppi, United States Navy, members; and Lt. Comdr. James C. Page, United States Navy, judge advocate.

Growing out of this accusation and this general court martial, the record of which I have before me, and growing out of this trial, the boy was convicted by these biased members of this courts-martial board. I say that to the Members of this Congress because, in my estimation, the judgment that was given by these members of the Navy and Marine Corps was biased and was prejudiced, and, in my opinion, as a Member of Congress and as a Reserve officer in the United States Navy, those men are not entitled to wear the navy blue uniform because of their prejudged opinions toward enlisted men.

They gave this man 5 years in the penitentiary and a dishonorable discharge. If that is justice, Mr. Chairman, I want no part of the United States Navy, and I am still a member of the Reserves in the Navy. I do not think that is the justice that should be dealt out by any courts-martial board. That is the injustice, however, that was meted out to this boy.

I carried the matter up to Admiral Russell, Judge Advocate of the Navy, and he told me over the phone: "It looks like they threw the book at the boy."

I then carried the matter on to the Secretary of the Navy, who referred the case to a reviewing board, the head of which was Admiral Forte. I appeared before this board. They reduced his sentence to 29 months, together with a dishonorable discharge.

Mr. Chairman, I still maintan that is still too much. I maintain that justice should be brought about and at the most, 90 days in the brig would be excessive. I indeed thank you, personally, and the members of this committee for including in the bill a civilian review board or appeal board. In my opinion, it insures that such members of the armed forces as Bernis Amos Richardson and other boys of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corp will get justice in the future. My only objection to this is that it cannot be retroactive to correct some of the insults and some of the injustices that have been meted out by the top brass in the Pentagon Building and of the brass of the Army and Navy.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to expose this particular case on the floor of the Congress. In no way do I intend my remarks to be a general indictment of all of the officers of our great Navy, many of whom are most considerate and possess a great deal of what is known as the milk of human kindness. However, such a case as I have related today in many instances reflects on all of the officers of our armed forces.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO].

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask one of the members of the committee, if I may, a couple of questions which I have in mind in connection with this matter.

On page 14, line 10 of the bill, I am not quite clear as to just what the language means there when it says, "offender after having answered to the civil authorities."

What does that mean in the opinion of the committee?

Mr. VINSON. That means when the case has been disposed of.

Mr. FURCOLO. Does that mean after sentence or going in and pleading guilty or not guilty? The words are not clear in my own mind.

Mr. VINSON. Well, it means after the case has been disposed of, either an acquittal or conviction. It is the end of the case.

Mr. FURCOLO. The gentleman's interpretation, in other words, is that it also means after the man has served the sentence the civil court has given.

Mr. VINSON. Yes.

Mr. FURCOLO. I thank the gentleman. Then, on pages 23 and 24, with reference to the enlisted person serving on the court, it says that enlisted persons may serve if they are not members of the same unit as the defendant. On 24, beginning with line 17, it defines what the word "unit" means. As I interpret that, if you had a ship at sea, for example, with five, six, or seven hundred men aboard, no enlisted man on that ship could serve on the court martial body. I just want to know if that is what the committee has in mind and if that is their interpretation of it.

Mr. VINSON. That would be a question to be determined by the commanding officer, and if the commanding officer decided that there was such a small number in the unit that they would be prejudiced, they would not be privileged to be on the court. Of course, the bill further says that if he denies him that right, he must make a written statement for the record.

Mr. FURCOLO. I understand that. I also want to point out, for whatever consideration the committee might give it, on page 39, lines 17 and 18, there is a clause in there, and it is in all the court-martial books, which is supposed to be in there for the benefit of the defendant pointing out if after a plea of guilty the defendant sets up a matter inconsistent with the plea, you have to have a trial. I think probably you have to have that provision, but I do know that very often in a matter of mitigation or extenuation—I have had it happen myself when representing one of these fellows—you may have a matter that is inconsistent with the plea of guilty, but the defendant then has to go through a trial which often results in greater punishment to him because he did not plead guilty. I do not know how you would handle the situation, but I think the committee ought to give it some consideration.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, does the gentleman not think that the defendant's attitude in being willing to plead guilty would have a great deal to do with the sentence imposed? I would think it would show his attitude toward the court, and that should be considered.

Mr. FURCOLO. It might well be. I know of some cases where it does not. In conclusion, the only other thing I want to say is this: I think that this bill is a great step forward; there is no question about it. But, I do not think that this bill or any other bill that you are able to present at this time is ever going to remedy the grave injustices of the court-martial system or conduct of the court-martial system. On paper it gives the defendant as much protection as he wants; more than a civilian, in fact. But, the great difficulty is that you never get away from that command control, which means the administration of the system does not give the defendant the protection he gets on paper. It is not so much a question whether the commanding officer hands word down, as they do, but regardless of that, the whole atmosphere of the ship is permeated, and the members of the court know it. Even if the commanding officer says nothing, the members of the court-martial board still believe they should punish the defendant because they think their failure to do so may antagonize their commanding officer. They know the commanding officer signs their fitness reports, determines their promotions, and decides what sort of duty they will have. You are not going to get the sort of justice you are striving for in that sort of situation. I think the committee is to be complimented for giving as much protection as possible, and I think it important that the military should know that the Congress intends to follow that situation as close as they can. I do not think that section 37, which tries to prevent the commanding officer from influencing the court, will amount to a hill of beans. I know it is put in there and it says a lot of things, but I do not think it is going to amount to too much. I think it is important that the military know the Congress is going to follow this matter up and is going to try to see that the command control is kept within bounds as much as possible.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURCOLO. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Can the gentleman tell me whether this appeals board that is to be set up, or appeals court, is to have at least one member of the court a former enlisted man?

Mr. FURCOLO. I see Mr. BROOKS on his feet. Perhaps he would prefer to answer that as he is a member of the committee and I am not.

Mr. BROOKS. If the gentleman will yield, I think "board" is the wrong terminology to use. What we want to build up there is not a board at all but a court, that will have the prestige and the background and the influence and the ability of the United States Court of Appeals. We hope that will happen, and we put in this bill as requirements for the members of this court the same requirements as for judges of the United States Court of Appeals. That is important in this respect, that perhaps you may want to go to the United States Court of Appeals to get a judge, and he would be available.

Mr. GROSS. You do not require that a former enlisted man serve on that court?

Mr. BROOKS. No.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute to answer the gentleman.

Of course, the President has the right to appoint any type of man he sees fit to appoint. He can appoint a former enlisted man. He can appoint any lawyer, even though he has never had any military experience. It is entirely up to the President to select the type of man, just as he selects any other lawyer for appointment to a court. However, military service may be a factor in selecting him.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Do you outlaw anywhere in this bill the despotism that now exists in the occupied areas of foreign countries by which civilians are still being tried in military courts?

Mr. BROOKS. They are not tried under this code, they are tried under provost courts. This has nothing to do with provost courts. Perhaps Congress should go ahead and legislate on that matter, but it is not sought to do so under this bill.

Mr. GROSS. I hope it will.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this bill, H. R. 4080, now under consideration, is the culmination of many years of study, bearing the earmarks of many controversies that have arisen over military justice. From actual experience and actual observation, I commend the committee on their good work and on what I consider a tremendous step in the right direction.

I speak with some real feeling in the matter. I started my experience in this matter back in 1917 as a young lieutenant in the Regular Army, and served several years. I came into Congress in 1939 and was assigned to the Committee on Military Affairs and served with that committee for 8 years.

During the war we were fully aware of the need for revision of the court-martial procedure and in response to that need there was created in the Seventy-ninth Congress a special committee pursuant to House Resolution 20 of that Congress, on which special committee it was my privilege to serve. One of the subjects we studied extensively was the judicial system of the United States Army. The chairman of that special committee was my good friend from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM], who has already taken some part in the discussion here today.

During 1946, as a member of the subcommittee, of which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM] was chairman, I had the privilege of making a very special study of most of the shortcomings in the system of military justice as it was then functioning. I am very pleased to note in looking through the bill H. R. 4080 that most of the recommendations made by the special committee of the Seventy-ninth Congress in this field have been incorporated in this proposed legislation.

The recommendations made by the special committee on which I served may be found in House Report No. 2722 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, dated August 1, 1946. I will not take up the time of the Committee now to make detailed comparisons, but I do want the Committee on Armed Services to know that I, for one, deeply appreciate your having developed this legislation after comprehensive and thorough study of the great issues involved. Many of those issues are fundamental and far reaching. You have built up a good piece of legislation here. It may not be completely free of the need for further revision in the future, but, knowing the personnel of the Committee on Armed Services, I have tremendous confidence in you and I know you will continue your study and observation and develop further legislation of this kind when needed. That you will do this job carefully and well is evident from the good work that you have done on this bill. I know that you will always keep military justice on a high plane. I do not subscribe to any action by the Congress which will attempt or even tend to give Congress specific review powers or attempt to exercise any review powers of individual cases. I served on the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs for 8 years that got just about all the complaints that came to Congress from fellows who had been caught, tried, and convicted for any offense during their military service.

It is highly important that a sound system of justice be devised and that such system be permitted to function without undue interference by Congress in specific cases. It is also important that Congress be ever ready to revise and improve the system in the way best illustrated by the bill H. R. 4080 now before us. I congratulate the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS], chairman of the subcommittee, and all the members of the committee who worked on this legislation.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS].

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, I am proud to be a member of the subcommittee which has written the proposed legislation. Our proposal received the unanimous approval of the full committee of the armed services and we received the special commendation of our great chairman, the Honorable Carl Vinson, who is handling this legislation today.

We are confident that our committee is rendering the present armed forces a notable service. We are confident we are making a worth-while contribution to posterity. We would not presume to infer we have fashioned a perfect document, but we are firm in the belief that this bill gives to military justice greater democracy than it has ever known in any nation since the world began.

Members of the armed services charged with commission of crimes are guaranteed more rights than any civilian enjoys today in our Nation. Notable among these are as follows:

First. This bill guarantees the accused the right to have military counsel without cost at the pretrial investigation.

Second. The appointing authority reviews the sentence of every court with full right to reduce the sentence in any amount, even to the extent of dismissing the case.

Third. The Board of Review reviews the facts as well as the law with full authority to remit the sentence or any part thereof and to reverse the case.

Fourth. The Judge Advocate General may, if authorized by the secretary of his department, further reduce the sentence.

The above are notable advances, and guaranties in future days that are to come. This bill may need further revision. If it does, you may rest assured that our great chairman, the Honorable CARL VINSON, will lose no time in ordering proper revisions. We are convinced this is an excellent vehicle to further expand military justice with whatever changes the future may demand.

For, and on behalf of the committee, I want to thank our professional staff member, Mr. Robert W. Smart. Mr. Smart is a former member of the armed services and served as a judge advocate during the recent war. He possesses a wealth of knowledge on this terrifically important and broad subject. He has worked unceasingly with the committee in the consecrated effort to help us bring you a document worthy of your consideration. We are deeply indebted to Mr. Smart for his long and tedious hours he has given in our preparation of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, in presenting to the Congress this proposal, I urge its adoption.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE].

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Chairman, this bill to unify, consolidate, revise, and codify the Articles of War, the Articles for the Government of the Navy, and the disciplinary laws of the Coast Guard, and to enact and establish a uniform code of military justice, is clearly a distinct and timely step in the progress relating to military justice. For many years, both in time of war and in time of peace, committees of Congress have found it necessary and proper to study this subject matter and with varying degrees of success and failure. During this time, there has been a sort of feeling throughout the Nation, amongst millions of people, that there has been too much partiality, inconsistency, "command control," and even injustice, as a result of the system of military justice which we have been acting under, both in times of war and peace.

Having been a practicing lawyer and having been admitted before the supreme court of the State of California, and in like manner, for many years admitted to the bar of the United States Supreme Court, and having served as a member of the judiciary committee of the Bar Association of the State of California, and at present being a member of the legislative committee of the California State bar, I have sat in an advantageous position in knowing the need, yes, even the necessity of this uniform code of military justice. Behind it is the accumulation of years of experience and study.

The record of study and diligence of the Brooks subcommittee is undisputed and of a most distinguished nature. I congratulate him and the subcommittee members. By invitation, I had the pleasure of sitting with the subcommittee, without being an official member thereof, but because of my being a member of the Armed Services Committee and being especially interested in the subject matter. I, therefore, personally observed the impartiality, the forthrightness with which witnesses testified before the committee and with which the subcommittee considered same. I emphatically commend this bill to the unanimous approval of the House as a step in the progress of military law, both as to the substance of the law and as to the procedure. It is the first time in the history of our Nation that there has been a Uniform Code of Military Justice, and I mean uniform. It applies uniformly to all branches of the armed services, both in times of war and in times of peace, and it supersedes the existing articles of war, in the related fields of military justice. The civilian court of appeals is for the first time set up and is uniform for all armed services. The accused must have legally qualified counsel and is entitled to have the same upon request, and the court martial must be composed, in part, of a reasonable number of enlisted men also, and there is an automatic review of both the facts, as well as the law to be made by competent legal authorities. The members of the Reserve components are protected in temporary service by reason of the fact that unless they signed a consent in writing, that when on temporary duty, they are not subject to this code. General or flag officers are likewise subject to the same uniform procedures as are enlisted men. In substance and effect, it further requires that the Judge Advocate General must himself be a lawyer and must at least have 8 years accumulated experience.

There are many more revolutionary and sound improvements in the substance of the law and the processes by which the law is applied, of pronounced assurance, of increased protection against opportunity of unfair and unkind men doing and administering unfair practices and punishments in the military service. The trial and error of this Uniform Code of Military Justice will enable Congress to cooperate with the splendid men of the armed forces.

Assuming that the Senate will find reason to accept this bill, at least in substance, on account of its manifest soundness and fairness, I anticipate great satisfaction throughout the armed forces and in the civilian population of our Nation.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, there are no more requests for time on this side.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time. I yield back the balance of the time on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a Uniform Code of Military Justice for the government of the armed forces of the United States, unifying, consolidating, revising, and codifying the Articles of War, the Articles for the Government of the Navy, and the disciplinary laws of the Coast Guard, is hereby enacted as follows, and the articles in this section may be cited as "Uniform Code of Military Justice, Article ."

A court-martial so convened shall have jurisdiction to try the dismissed officer on such charges, and he shall be held to have waived the right to plead any statute of limitations applicable to any offense with which he is charged. ART. 8. Apprehension of deserters.

No member of the armed forces of the United States shall be placed in confinement in immediate association with enemy prisoners or other foreign nationals not members of the armed forces of the United States.

ART. 13. Punishment prohibited before trial.

Subject to the provisions of article 57, no person, while being held for trial or the results of trial, shall be subjected to punishment or penalty other than arrest or confinement upon the charges pending against him, nor shall the arrest or confinement imposed upon him be any more rigorous than the circumstances require to insure his presence, but he may be subjected to punishment during such period for minor infractions of discipline.

ART. 14. Delivery of offenders to civil authorities.

(a) Under such regulations as the Secretary of the Department may prescribe, a member of the armed forces accused of an offense against civil authority may be delivered, upon request, to the civil authority for trial.

(b) When delivery under this article is made to any civil authority of a person undergoing sentence of a court-martial, such delivery, if followed by conviction in a civil tribunal, shall be held to interrupt the execution of the sentence of the court-martial, and the offender after having answered to the civil authorities for his offense shall, upon the request of competent military authority, be returned to military custody for the completion of the said court-martial sentence.

PART III—NON-JUDICIAL PUNISHMENT

ART. 15. Commanding officer's non-judicial punishment.

(a) Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, any commanding officer may, in addition to or in lieu of admonition or reprimand, impose one of the following disciplinary punishments for minor offenses without the intervention of a court-martial—

(1) upon officers and warrant officers of his command:

(A) withholding of privileges for a period not to exceed two consecutive weeks; or

(B) restriction to certain specified limits, with or without suspension from duty, for a period not to exceed two consecutive weeks; or

(C) if imposed by an officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction, forfeiture of not to exceed one-half of his pay per month for a period not exceeding 1 month;

(2) upon other military personnel of his command:

(A) withholding of privileges for a period not to exceed two consecutive weeks; or

(B) restriction to certain specified limits, with or without suspension from duty, for a period not to exceed two consecutive weeks; or

(C) extra duties for a period not to exceed two consecutive weeks, and not to exceed 2 hours per day, holidays included; or

(D) reduction to next inferior grade if the grade from which demoted was established by the command or an equivalent or lower command; or

(E) if imposed upon a person attached to or embarked in a vessel, confinement for a period not to exceed seven consecutive days; or

(F) if imposed upon a person attached to or embarked in a vessel, confinement on bread and water or diminished rations for a period not to exceed five consecutive days.

(b) The Secretary of a Department may, by regulation, place limitations on the powers granted by this article with respect to the kind and amount of punishment authorized, the categories of commanding officers authorized to exercise such powers, and the applicability of this article to an accused who demands trial by court martial.

(c) An officer in charge may, for minor offenses, impose on enlisted persons assigned to the unit of which he is in charge, such of the punishments authorized to be imposed by commanding officers as the Secretary of the Department may by regulation specifically prescribe, as provided in subdivision (a) and (b).

(d) A person punished under authority of this article who deems his punishment unjust or disproportionate to the offense may, through the proper channel, appeal to the next superior authority. The appeal shall be promptly forwarded and decided, but the person punished may in the meantime be required to undergo the punishment adjudged. The officer who imposes the punishment, his successor in command, and superior authority shall have power to suspend, set aside, or remit any part or amount of the punishment and to restore all rights, privileges, and property affected.

(e) The imposition and enforcement of disciplinary punishment under authority of this article for any act or omission shall not be a bar to trial by court-martial for a serious crime or offense growing out of the same act or omission, and not properly punishable under this article; but the fact that a disciplinary punishment has been enforced may be shown by the accused upon trial, and when so shown shall be considered in determining the measure of punishment to be adjudged in the event of a finding of guilty.

ART. 16. Courts-martial classified.

There shall be three kinds of courts-martial in each of the armed forces, namely:

(1) General courts-martial, which shall consist of a law officer and any number of members not less than five;

(2) Special courts-martial, which shall consist of any number of members not less than three; and

(3) Summary courts-martial, which shall consist of one officer.

ART. 17. Jurisdiction of courts-martial in general.

(a) Each armed force shall have court-martial jurisdiction over all persons subject to this code. The exercise of jurisdiction by one armed force over personnel of another armed force shall be in accordance with regulations prescribed by the President.

(b) In all cases, departmental review subsequent to that by the officer with authority to convene a general court-martial for the command which held the trial, where such review is required under the provisions of this code, shall be carried out by the armed force of which the accused is a member.

ART. 18. Jurisdiction of general courts-martial.

Subject to article 17, general courts-martial shall have jurisdiction to try persons subject to this code for any offense made punishable by this code and may, under such limitations as the President may prescribe, adjudge any punishment not forbidden by this code, including the penalty of death when specifically authorized by this code. General courts-martial shall also have jurisdiction to try any person who by the law of war is subject to trial by a military tribunal and may adjudge any punishment permitted by the law of war.

ART. 19. Jurisdiction of special courts-martial.

Subject to article 17, summary courts-martial shall have jurisdiction to try persons subject to this code except officers, warrant officers, cadets, aviation cadets, and midshipmen for any noncapital offense made punishable by this code, but no person who objects thereto shall be brought to trial before a summary court-martial unless he has been permitted to refuse punishment under article 15. ART. 21. Jurisdiction of courts-martial not exclusive.

The provisions of this code conferring jurisdiction upon courts-martial shall not be construed as depriving military commissions, provost courts, or other military tribunals of concurrent jurisdiction in respect of offenders or offenses that by statute or by the law of war may be tried by such military commissions, provost courts, or other military tribunals.

35. Service of charges.

ART. 30. Charges and specifications.

(a) Charges and specifications shall be signed by a person subject to this code under oath before an officer of the armed forces authorized to administer oaths and shall state—

(1) that the signer has personal knowledge of, or has investigated, the matters set forth therein; and

(2) that the same are true in fact to the best of his knowledge and belief.

(b) Upon the preferring of charges, the proper authority shall take immediate steps to determine what disposition should be made thereof in the interest of justice and discipline, and the person accused shall be informed of the charges against him as soon as practicable.

ART. 31. Compulsory self-incrimination prohibited.

(a) No person subject to this code shall compel any person to incriminate himself or to answer any question the answer to which may tend to incriminate him.

(b) No person subject to this code shall interrogate, or request any statement from, an accused or a person suspected of an offense without first informing him of the nature of the accusation and advising him that he does not have to make any statement regarding the offense of which he is accused or suspected and that any statement made by him may be used as evidence against him in a trial by court-martial.

(c) No person subject to this code shall compel any person to make a statement or produce evidence before any military tribunal if the statement or evidence is not material to the issue and may tend to degrade him.

(d) No statement obtained from any person in violation of this article or by any unlawful inducement shall be received in evidence against him in a trial by court-martial.

ART. 32. Investigation.

(a) No charge or specification shall be referred to a general court martial for trial until a thorough and impartial investigation of all the matters set forth therein has been made. This investigation shall include inquiries as to the truth of the matter set forth in the charges, form of charges, and the disposition which should be made of the case in the interest of justice and discipline.

(b) The accused shall be advised of the charges against him and of his right to be represented at such investigation by counsel. Upon his own request he shall be represented by civilian counsel if provided by him, or military counsel of his own selection if such counsel be reasonably available, or by counsel appointed by the officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction over the command. At such investigation full opportunity shall be given to the accused to cross-examine witnesses against him if they are available and to present anything he may desire in his own behalf, either in defense or mitigation, and the investigating officer shall examine available witnesses requested by the accused. If the charges are forwarded after such investigation, they shall be accompanied by a statement of the substance of the testimony taken on both sides and a copy thereof shall be given to the accused.

(c) If an investigation of the subject matter of an offense has been conducted prior to the time the accused is charged with the offense, and if the accused was present at such investigation and afforded the opportunities for representation, cross-examination, and presentation prescribed in subdivision (b) of this article, no further investigation of that charge is necessary under this article unless it is demanded by the accused after he is informed of the charge. A demand for further investigation entitles the accused to recall witnesses for further cross-examination and to offer any new evidence in his own behalf.

(d) The requirements of this article shall be binding on all persons administering this code, but failure to follow them in any case shall not constitute jurisdictional error.

ART. 33. Forwarding of charges.

When a person is held for trial by general court martial, the commanding officer shall, within 8 days after the accused is ordered into arrest or confinement, if practicable, forward the charges, together with the investigation and allied papers, to the officer exercising general court martial jurisdiction. If the same is not practicable, he shall report to such officer the reasons for delay.

ART. 34. Advice of staff judge advocate and reference for trial.

(a) Before directing the trial of any charge by general court martial, the convening authority shall refer it to his staff judge advocate or legal officer for consideration and advice. The convening authority shall not refer a charge to a general court martial for trial unless he has found that the charge alleges an offense under this code and is warranted by evidence indicated in the report of investigation.

(b) If the charges or specifications are not formally correct or do not conform to the substance of the evidence contained in the report of the investigating officer, formal corrections and such changes in the charges and specifications as are needed to make them conform to the evidence may be made.

ART. 35. Services of charges.

The trial counsel to whom court-martial charges are referred for trial shall cause to be served upon the accused a copy of the charges upon which trial is to be had. In time of peace no person shall, against his objection, be brought to trial before a general court martial within a period of 5 days subsequent to the service of the charges upon him, or before a special court martial within a period of 3 days subsequent to the service of the charges upon him.

(b) All rules and regulations made in pursuance of this article shall be uniform insofar as practicable and shall be reported to the Congress.

ART. 37. Unlawfully influencing action of court.

ART. 39. Sessions.

Whenever a general or special court-martial is to deliberate or vote, only the members of the court shall be present. After a general court-martial has finally voted on the findings, the court may request the law officer and the reporter to appear before the court to put the findings in proper form, and such proceedings shall be on the record. All other proceedings, including any other consultation of the court with counsel or the law officer shall be made a part of the record and be in the presence of the accused, the defense counsel, the trial counsel, and in general court-martial cases, the law officer.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in this article, a person charged with desertion in time of peace or any of the offenses punishable under articles 119 through 132, inclusive, shall not be liable to be tried by court-martial if the offense was committed more than 3 years before the receipt of sworn charges and specifications by an officer exercising summary court-martial jurisdiction over the command.

(c) Except as otherwise provided in this article, a person charged with any offense shall not be liable to be tried by court-martial or punished under article 15 if the offense was committed more than 2 years before the receipt of sworn charges and specifications by an officer exercising summary court-martial jurisdiction over the command or before the imposition of punishment under article 15.

(d) Periods in which the accused was absent from territory in which the United States has the authority to apprehend him, or in the custody of civil authorities, or in the hands of the enemy, shall be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed in this article.

(e) In the case of any offense the trial of which in time of war is certified to the President by the Secretary of the Department to be detrimental to the prosecution of the war or inimical to the national security, the period of limitation prescribed in this article shall be extended to 6 months after the termination of hostilities as proclaimed by the President or by a joint resolution of Congress.

shall be suspended until 3 years after the termination of hostilities as proclaimed by the President or by a joint resolution of Congress.

ART. 44. Former jeopardy.

No person shall, without his consent, be tried a second time for the same offense; but no proceeding in which an accused has been found guilty by a court-martial upon any charge or specification shall be held to be a trial in the sense of this article until the finding of guilty has become final after review of the case has been fully completed.

ART. 45. Pleas of the accused.

(a) If an accused arraigned before a court-martial makes any irregular pleading, or after a plea of guilty sets up a matter inconsistent with the plea, or if it appears that he has entered the plea of guilty improvidently or through lack of understanding of its meaning and effect, or if he fails or refuses to plead, a plea of not guilty shall be entered in the record, and the court shall proceed as though he had pleaded not guilty.

(b) A plea of guilty by the accused shall not be received to an offense for which the death penalty may be adjudged.

ART. 46. Opportunity to obtain witnesses and other evidence.

The trial counsel, defense counsel, and the court-marial shall have equal opportunity to obtain witnesses and other evidence in accordance with such regulations as the President may prescribe. (3) willfully neglects or refuses to appear, or refuses to qualify as a witness or to testify or to produce any evidence which such person may have been legally subpenaed to produce; shall be deemed guilty of an offense against the United States.

(b) Any person who commits an offense denounced by this article shall be tried on information in a United States district court or in a court of original criminal jurisdiction in any of the territorial possessions of the United States, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon such courts for such purpose. Upon conviction, such persons shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment for a period not exceeding 6 months, or both.

(c) It shall be the duty of the United States district attorney or the officer prosecuting for the Government in any such court of original criminal jurisdiction, upon the certification of the facts to him by the military court, commission, court of inquiry, or board, to file an information against and prosecute any person violating this article.

(d) The fees and mileage of witnesses shall be advanced or paid out of the appropriations for the compensation of witnesses.

ART. 48. Contempts.

A court-martial, provost court, or military commission may punish for contempt any person who uses any menacing words, signs, or gestures in its presence, or who disturbs its proceedings by any riot or disorder. Such punishment shall not exceed confinement for 30 days or a fine of $100, or both.

ART. 49. Depositions.

(a) At any time after charges have been signed as provided in article 30, any party may take oral or written depositions unless an authority competent to convene a court-martial for the trial of such charges forbids it for good cause. If a deposition is to be taken before charges are referred for trial, such an authority may designate officers to represent the prosecution and the defense and may authorize such officers to take the deposition of any witness.

(b) The party at whose instance a deposition is to be taken shall give to every other party reasonable written notice of the time and place for taking the deposition.

(c) Depositions may be taken before and authenticated by any military or civil officer authorized by the laws of the United States or by the laws of the place where the deposition is taken to administer oaths.

(d) A duly authenticated deposition taken upon reasonable notice to the other party, so far as otherwise admissible under the rules of evidence, may be read in evidence before any military court or commission in any case not capital, or in any proceeding before a court of inquiry or military board, if it appears—

(1) that the witness resides or is beyond the State, Territory, or District in which the court, commission, or board is ordered to sit, or beyond the distance of 100 miles from the place of trial or hearing; or

(2) that the witness by reason of death, age, sickness, bodily infirmity, imprisonment, military necessity, nonamenability to process, or other reasonable cause, is unable or refuses to appear and testify in person at the place of trial or hearing; or

(3) that the present whereabouts of the witness is unknown.

(e) Subject to the requirements of subdivision (d) of this article, testimony by deposition may be adduced by the defense in capital cases.

(f) Subject to the requirements of subdivision (d) of this article, a deposition may be read in evidence in any case in which the death penalty is authorized by law but is not mandatory, whenever the convening authority shall have directed that the case be treated as not capital, and in such a case a sentence of death may not be adjudged by the court-martial.

ART. 50. Admissibility of records of courts of inquiry.

(a) In any case not capital and not extending to the dismissal of an officer, the sworn testimony, contained in the duly authenticated record of proceedings of a court of inquiry, of a person whose oral testimony cannot be obtained, may, if other admissible under the rules of evidence, be read in evidence by any party before a court-martial or military commission if the accused was a party and was accorded the rights of an accused when before the court of inquiry and if the same issue was involved or if the accused consents to the introduction of such evidence.

(b) Such testimony may be read in evidence only by the defense in capital cases or cases extending to the dismissal of an officer.

(c) Such testimony may also be read in evidence before a court of inquiry or a military board.

ART. 51. Voting and rulings.

(b) The law officer of a general court-martial and the president of a special court-martial shall rule upon interlocutory questions, other than challenge, arising during the proceedings. Any such ruling made by the law officer of a general court-martial upon any interlocutory question other than a motion for a finding of not guilty, or the question of accused's sanity, shall be final and shall constitute the ruling of the court; but the law officer may change any such ruling at any time during the trial. Unless such ruling be final, if any member objects thereto, the court shall be cleared and closed and the question decided by a vote as provided in article 52, viva voce, beginning with the junior in rank.

(c) Before a vote is taken on the findings, the law officer of a general court-martial and the president of a special court-martial shall, in the presence of the accused and counsel, instruct the court as to the elements of the offense and charge the court—

(1) that the accused must be presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal and competent evidence beyond reasonable doubt;

(2) that in the case being considered, if there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, the doubt shall be resolved in favor of the accused and he shall be acquitted;

(3) that if there is a reasonable doubt as to the degree of guilt, the finding must be in a lower degree as to which there is no such doubt; and

(4) that the burden of proof to establish the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt is upon the Government.

ART. 52. Number of votes required.

(a) (1) No person shall be convicted of an offense for which the death penalty is made mandatory by law, except by the concurrence of all the members of the court-martial present at the time the vote is taken.

If both the president and the law officer are unavailable for such reasons, the record shall be authenticated by two members.

(b) Each special and summary court-martial shall keep a separate record of the proceedings in each case, which record shall contain such matter and be authenticated in such manner as may be required by regulations which the President may prescribe.

ART. 59. Error of law; lesser included offense.

(a) A finding or sentence of a court-martial shall not be held incorrect on the ground of an error of law unless the error materially prejudices the substantial rights of the accused.

(b) Any reviewing authority with the power to approve or affirm a finding of guilty may approve or affirm, instead, so much of the finding as includes a lesser included offense.

ART. 60. Initial action on the record.

After every trial by court-martial the record shall be forwarded to the convening authority, and action thereon may be taken by the officer who convened the court, an officer commanding for the time being, a successor in command, or by any officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction.

ART. 61. Same—General court-martial records.

The convening authority shall refer the record of every general court-martial to his staff judge advocate or legal officer, who shall submit his written opinion thereon to the convening authority. If the final action of the court has resulted in an acquittal of all charges and specifications, the opinion shall be limited to questions of jurisdiction and shall be forwarded with the record to The Judge Advocate General of the armed forces of which the accused is a member.

ART. 62. Reconsideration and revision.

(a) If a specification before a court-martial has been dismissed on motion and the ruling does not amount to a finding of not guilty, the convening authority may return the record to the court for reconsideration of the ruling and any further appropriate action.

(b) Where there is an apparent error or omission in the record or where the record shows improper action by a court-martial with respect to a finding or sentence which can be rectified without material prejudice to the substantial rights of the accused, the convening authority may return the record to the court for appropriate action. In no case, however, may the record be returned—

(1) for reconsideration of a finding of not guilty or a ruling which amounts to a finding of not guilty; or

(2) for increasing the severity of the sentence unless the sentence prescribed for the offense is mandatory.

ART. 63. Rehearings.

(a) If the convening authority disapproves the findings and sentence of a court-martial he may, except where there is lack of sufficient evidence in the record to support the findings, order a rehearing, in which case he shall state the reasons for disapproval. If he does not order a rehearing, he shall dismiss the charges.

(b) Every rehearing shall take place before a court-martial composed of members not members of the court-martial which first heard the case. Upon such rehearing the accused shall not be tried for any offense of which he was found not guilty by the first court-martial, and no sentence in excess of or more severe than the original sentence shall be imposed unless the sentence is based upon a finding of guilty of an offense not considered upon the merits in the original proceedings or unless the sentence prescribed for the offense is mandatory.

ART. 64. Approved by the convening authority.

In acting on the findings and sentence of a court-martial, the convening authority shall approve only such findings of guilty, and the sentence or such part or amount of the sentence, as he finds correct in law and fact and as he in his discretion determines should be approved. Unless he indicates otherwise, approval of the sentence shall constitute approval of the findings and sentence.

ART. 65. Disposition of records after review by the convening authority.

(a) When the convening authority has taken final action in a general court-martial case, he shall forward the entire record, including his action thereon and the opinion or opinions of the staff judge advocate or legal officer, to the appropriate Judge Advocate General.

(b) Where the sentence of a special court-martial as approved by the convening authority includes a bad-conduct discharge, whether or not suspended, the record shall be forwarded to the officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction over the command to be reviewed in the same manner as a record of trial by general court-martial or directly to the appropriate Judge Advocate General to be reviewed by a board of review. If the sentence as approved by an officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction includes a bad-conduct discharge, whether or not suspended, the record shall be forwarded to the appropriate Judge Advocate General to be reviewed by a board of review.

(c) All other special and summary court-martial records shall be reviewed by a judge advocate of the Army or Air Force, a law specialist of the Navy, or a law specialist or lawyer of the Coast Guard or Treasury Department and shall be transmitted and disposed of as the Secretary of the Department may prescribe by regulations.

ART. 66. Review by the board of review.

(a) The Judge Advocate General of each of the armed forces shall constitute in his office one or more boards of review, each composed of not less than three officers or civilians, each of whom shall be a member of the bar of a Federal court or of the highest court of a State of the United States.

(b) The Judge Advocate General shall refer to a board of review the record in every case of trial by court-martial in which the sentence, as approved, affects a general or flag officer or extends to death, dismissal of an officer, cadet, or midshipman, dishonorable or bad-conduct discharge, or confinement for 1 year or more.

(c) In a case referred to it, the board of review shall act only with respect to the findings and sentence as approved by the convening authority. It shall affirm only such findings of guilty, and the sentence or such part or amount of the sentence, as it finds correct in law and fact and determines, on the basis of the entire record, should be approved. In considering the record it shall have authority to weigh the evidence, judge the credibility of witnesses, and determine controverted questions of fact, recognizing that the trial court saw and heard the witnesses.

(d) If the board of review sets aside the findings and sentence, it may, except where the setting aside is based on lack of sufficient evidence in the record to support the findings, order a rehearing. Otherwise it shall order that the charges be dismissed.

(e) The Judge Advocate General shall, unless there is to be further action by the President or the Secretary of the Department or the Judicial Council, instruct the convening authority to take action in accordance with the decision of the board of review. If the board of review has ordered a rehearing but the convening authority finds a rehearing impracticable, he may dismiss the charges.

(f) The Judge Advocates General of the armed forces shall prescribe uniform rules of procedure for proceedings in and before boards of review and shall meet periodically to formulate policies and procedure in regard to review of court-martial cases in the offices of the Judge Advocates General and by the boards of review.

ART. 67. Review by the Court of Military Appeals.

(2) All cases reviewed by a board of review which The Judge Advocate General orders forwarded to the Court of Military Appeals for review; and

(3) All cases reviewed by a board of review in which, upon petition of the accused and on good cause shown, the Court of Military Appeals has granted a review.

(c) The accused shall have 30 days from the time he is notified of the decision of a board of review to petition the Court of Military Appeals for a grant of review. The court shall act upon such a petition withing 30 days of the receipt thereof.

(d) In any case reviewed by it, the Court of Military Appeals shall act only with respect to the findings and sentence as approved by the convening authority and as affirmed or set aside as incorrect in law by the board of review. In a case which The Judge Advocate General orders forwarded to the Court of Military Appeals, such action need be taken only with respect to the issues raised by him. In a case reviewed upon petition of the accused, such action need be taken only with respect to issues specified in the grant of review. The Court of Military Appeals shall take action only with respect to matters of law.

(e) If the Court of Military Appeals sets aside the findings and sentence, it may, except where the setting aside is based on lack of sufficient evidence in the record to support the findings, order a rehearing. Otherwise it shall order that the charges be dismissed.

(f) After it has acted on a case, the Court of Military Appeals may direct The Judge Advocate General to return the record to the board of review for further review in accordance with the decision of the court. Otherwise, unless there is to be further action by the President, or the Secretary of the Department, The Judge Advocate General shall instruct the convening authority to take action in accordance with that decision. If the court has ordered a rehearing, but the convening authority finds a rehearing impracticable, he may dismiss the charges.

(g) The Court of Military Appeals and The Judge Advocates General of the armed forces shall meet annually to make a comprehensive survey of the operation of this code and report the the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and of the House of Representatives and to the Secretary of Defense and the Secretaries of the Departments the number and status of pending cases any recommendations relating to uniformity of sentence policies, amendments to this code, and any other matters deemed appropriate.

ART. 68. Branch offices.

Such Assistant Judge Advocate General and any such board of review shall be empowered to perform for that command, under the general supervision of The Judge Advocate General, the duties which The Judge Advocate General and a board of review in his office would otherwise be required to perform in respect of all cases involving sentences not requiring approval by the President.

The vacation of the suspension of a dismissal shall not be effective until approved by the Secretary of the Department.

(c) The suspension of any other sentence may be vacated by any authority competent to convene, for the command in which the accused is serving or assigned, a court of the kind that imposed the sentence.

The reappointment of such a former officer shall be without regard to position vacancy and shall affect the promotion status of other officers only insofar as the President may direct. All time between the dismissal and such reappointment shall be considered as actual service for all purposes, including the right to receive pay and allowances.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON: On page 103, after line 25, after section 15, insert:

"There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON: On page 95, line 21, after "that" insert "the provisions of article 67 (a) and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON: On page 60, lines 8, 9, and 10, delete the words "has requested the reconsideration of a case before the Board of Review, or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON. That is all the committee amendments. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FURCOLO: On page 14, line 14, strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the words "except that in those cases where the conviction in the civil tribunal is based on substantially the same facts as the court-martial sentence, any period of confinement served as a result of conviction in a civil tribunal shall be counted toward completion of any court-martial sentence of confinement."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has to do with the question I asked. It is intended to cover situations where a sailor may go ashore and get into some difficulty with the civil authorities and cause some damage and as a result of that he is brought to a court martial or some sort of punishment by the naval authorities. Let us assume he is given a sentence of 6 months or a year. According to the bill as it is written now, what would happen is that after he has served a week or a month, if the civilian authorities wanted him, he would then go to the civilian authorities and perhaps be given a sentence of 6 months or a year for the very same offense. Then he would serve that sentence, which might be on substantially the same facts.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURCOLO. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. I wish the gentleman would explain his amendment. As I understand it, your amendment would have no relation to an offense committed in the armed services. If he commits an offense in the armed service and gets 3 months and then he commits an offense at the same time in the civil jurisdiction and gets a 6-month sentence, then you want to give him credit to abate his 3-month sentence in the armed services?

Mr. FURCOLO. In effect there are many cases where, on substantially the same facts—and that is what the amendment provides—a man can be brought in by both the civilian and military authorities.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURCOLO. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman is aware that in civil life a man can be tried three times for the same offense?

Mr. FURCOLO. That is right.

Mr. BROOKS. Ordinarily the courts take that into consideration, and when the courts fail in their function, then the pardoning power steps in and exercises its right.

Mr. FURCOLO. The courts do take that into consideration.

Very frankly, as far as I am concerned, I should like to see it written right into law so that there could not be any discretion on the part of the military authorities to make that man serve double time, really, on the same substantial facts; and that is what this provision of the bill would do. There are many many cases in which a man will go off on a tear and commit certain acts that will bring him before both the military authorities and the civilian authorities for the same offense. Six months would be adequate punishment for the offense committed, but without this amendment the military authorities could give him 6 months, he could serve 3, be turned over to the civilian authorities; they could give him another 6 months, make him serve it, and then he would have to be returned to the military authorities to serve the balance of his 6 months' sentence there. Such procedure is not just, but the way the bill is worded there can be no discretion, for it states that he shall be returned for the completion of the court-martial sentence. There is no discretion there. It practically makes a double sentence for the same offense mandatory. Briefly, the prevention of that injustice is the sum and substance of what I wish to accomplish by this amendment.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has been carefully thought out; and, as was stated in the debate, hearings were held on the bill for five solid weeks, oftentimes lasting 6, 7, and 8 hours a day. After the hearings were concluded the bill was studied section by section with the best lawyers of the Department, together with our own legal staff. The bill is highly technical, and we do not want to throw it out of balance. I do not believe the gentleman's amendment was intended to throw it out of balance, but I believe it will not be in the best interest of the service to accept the amendment, and I ask that it be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FURCOLO: On page 37, lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "or absence without leave."

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, this has to do only with the statute of limitations. The bill provides that for certain offenses there is a period of time during which the statute runs, but on the more serious offenses the statute may not run.

Absence without leave is the sort of thing whether in time of war or in time of peace that happens hundreds and thousands of times; it is a fairly common offense in the services. Strange as it may seem, in many, many instances, even in time of war, it is not a very important offense, and I think absence without leave should not be included with the more serious offenses.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURCOLO. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. Let us get right down to business; does the gentleman believe that a person charged with desertion or absence without leave in time of war should have the benefit of the statute of limitations? Does the gentleman think the statute should run in such a case where the fate of the Nation is imperiled and they need him to do military duty?

Mr. FURCOLO. If a man can be absent without leave without his absence being noticed for 3 years, certainly it is not a very serious thing. Desertion and absence without leave are two very different things. Absence without leave is one of the most common offenses in the services; it happens hundreds of thousands of times. A man should not have that hanging over his head for the period of time indicated here.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and ask that it be voted down. I believe the gentleman from Massachusetts has not made out a good case for his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FURCOLO: On page 89, line 4, strike out all of the words in line 4, and insert the words: "Punished as a court martial may direct."

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, the bill as it is now written says that any officer who is convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman shall be dismissed from the armed services. There is no discretion; it is mandatory. There are many, many offenses that are relatively minor which can be construed, and actually they are correct in construing them, as being conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman and, of course, they must be dismissed. I would be satisfied to leave it up to the discretion of the court martial. You do that in the case of more serious offenses. That is the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, we accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LANHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4080) to unify, consolidate, revise, and codify the Articles of War, the Articles for the Government of the Navy, and the disciplinary laws of the Coast Guard, and to enact and establish a Uniform Code of Military Justice, pursuant to House Resolution 201, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

My employment, of course, is as long as I have interest in housing affecting American principles of government. (4) I am paid no salary. Occasionally the hat is passed around to solicit funds to cover current expenses for printing, publication work, circulars, news letters, postage, labor mailing costs. I suppose if there was any cash on hand I would be entitled to it for services rendered, but there never has been, and I even underwrite the deficit that often occurs from my own pocket. (5) No one pays me my salary. I expect pay from no one for personal services. I expect the above organizations only to defray costs of printing, labor mailing costs, and the expenses attached to sending out a news bulletin of news letters from time to time, and hotel meetings for general discussion relative to regulations and laws affecting housing at any time. (6) I am paid nothing personally. Presumably all collections are for overhead expense. I suppose if we ever had any cash on hand, I would be voted something for my services, but alas too often I even pay the deficit. (7) Costs of holding meetings in hotels, cost of publicity attendant to public hearings, costs of news letter, labor for mailing, stamps, secretarial costs, typing costs.

Its sole office is located at 11 West Forty-second Street, New York, N. Y. Its members are state and local associations whose individual members are representative of the field forces of the life-insurance industry. Registrant's funds are derived from annual membership dues; advertising space sold in registrant's monthly publication, Life Association News; small income from its annual conventions; and small amounts of interest on United States bonds and cash deposits in savings banks. the District of Columbia Optometric law for the purpose of raising the standards of the profession and providing better visual care for the residents of the District of Columbia; I have also discussed with Members of the Congress the inclusion of the profession of optometry in legislation which has been introduced in the Congress looking to the establishment of a national health insurance program, as well as in bills looking to the establishment of a health department in the Executive Branch of the Government and the expansion of the National Social Security program. On behalf of Remington Rand Inc., I have urged the inclusion in the First Deficiency and Treasury-Post Office Appropriation bills of language which would modify the existing restrictions pertaining to the purchase of typewriters for Government use. At the present time, the statutory limitations make it impossible for the Legislative and Judicial Branches of the Government to purchase any typewriters and it is almost impossible for the Executive Branches of the Government to purchase much-needed new standard typewriters. I have represented Ruth Obre Dubonnet, a native-born American, in her efforts to regain her American citizenship which she lost during World War II under circumstances amounting to duress. After the United States District Court for the District of Columbia dismissed her petition filed for this purpose, the late Honorable Sol Bloom introduced a bill, H. R. 598, to accomplish this purpose. The bill is now pending before the Judiciary Committee of the House. On behalf of the District of Columbia Optometric Association, I was employed to support the inclusion in the District of Columbia Sales Tax bill a provision which would have the effect of exempting the sale of glasses by optometrists from the taxing provisions of the sales tax bill.

Stockton,[7] Kenneth E., 67 Broad Street, New York, N. Y. (1) I have been associated with International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. in various capacities for many years and have been president of its subsidiary, American Cable & Radio Corp. for the past year. Recently this company has been negotiating with Western Union Telegraph Co. for the purchase of the latter company's cables, which negotiations have reached the point of necessitating several governmental approvals and possibly congressional action. Activities in the foregoing connection necessarily require my contact with Members of Congress and other Government officials. However, this is an incidental function under my duties for which I receive no additional remuneration above my regular salary. Neither have I made nor do I intend to make any contributions for the purposes designated in paragraph 307. It is not the principal purpose of my employment to influence legislation, nor do I receive my compensation principally for the purpose of influencing legislation. The above-mentioned activities would not seem to come within the purview of the Lobbying Act; however, I have no objection to filing under the same and will furnish any further information if desired. My salary is $45,000 per annum, no part of which is specifically for the purpose of influencing legislation. (2) [Blank.] (3) [Blank.] (4) None. (5) I have not been employed to support or oppose any particular legislation, but as president of the American Cable & Radio Corp. I favor and will urge the enactment of appropriate legislation which will permit my company or its subsidiaries to purchase Western Union cables under authority of an amendment to section 222 (c) (2) of the Communications Act.

Recently this company has been negotiating with Western Union Telegraph Co. for the purchase of the latter company's cables, which negotiations might require several governmental approvals and possibly congressional legislation. Activities in the foregoing connection necessarily require my contact with various Government officials and with Members of Congress concerning the possible necessity of legislation which will permit the merging of international telegraph companies. However, this is an incidental function of my duties for which I receive no additional remuneration above my regular salary. Neither have I made nor do I intend to make any contributions for the purposes designated in paragraph 307. It is not the principal purpose of my employment to influence legislation, nor do I receive my compensation principally for the purpose of influencing legislation. The above-mentioned activities would not seem to come within the purview of the Lobbying Act; however, I have no objection to filing under the same and will furnish any other further information desired. SENATE

FRIDAY, MAY 6, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, April 11, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art the light of all that is true, the strength of all that is good, and the inspiration of all that is beautiful, grant that daily we may accept the Master's overtures of counsel and companionship as we come to the sacrament of public service.

We pray that our minds may be impervious to all thoughts of personal aggrandizement. Deliver us from those attitudes and desires which are alien to the spirit of our blessed Lord.

Help us to believe that it is the high vocation of our beloved country to bring the blessings of democracy and freedom to all mankind.

Hear us in Christ's name. Amen.

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT—LETTER FROM D. R. HALL TO SENATOR BUTLER

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I do not often burden the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with any of my correspondence, but a few days ago I received a letter which I consider rather exceptional, and which I am sure the Members of the Senate would be interested in reading. I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be inserted in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OMAHA, NEBR., April 27, 1949.

Senator HUGH BUTLER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have lived in Omaha and Nebraska now for about 52 years, and this marks the first occasion I have ever had to address my duly elected representative.

I hesitate even now, as the thought keeps running through my mind: "What good will it do? Why waste your time? Who cares about what you think or say?" But for some reason, unknown to myself, I keep on writing.

I guess I do it because I was raised in a God-fearing family, that taught me to give a day's work for a day's pay, and keep my bills paid, and, above all, be loyal to my country and always guard our freedom well. Sounds rather strange when you actually put it on paper, but I can always remember hearing those words.

The thing that's bothering me, and has for some time now, is when are we going to begin practicing a little economy in our government? When is somebody going to call a halt to all this spending? And taxing?

Doesn't anybody ever say "No"?

I have to say "No" every day in operating on my income. Why isn't the same thing practiced in government as by it's individual citizens? Government—ours especially—is supposed to be made up of its citizens. Why, then, doesn't our Government today give some thought to the economy of the citizen and some relief in taxes, instead of passing more laws to raise taxes?

What I want is a chance to live within my income. I'll get along without all this so-called social security, socialized medicine, and health programs, providing everything I earn isn't taxed away from me—and the way this present Congress has been appropriating my money doesn't leave me very encouraged.

I'd like to see lower governmental expenses, which should mean lower taxes to me and thousands of other workers like me. I'd like to take home the money I earn and have a chance to spend it for the necessities to keep both ends meeting again.

Yours truly,

D. R. HALL.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED INCREASE IN SECOND-CLASS POSTAGE RATES

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] and myself, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the digest of presentation by the Elks magazine to committees of Congress in opposition to the proposed increase in second-class postage rates. I might add that the subscription price of the Elks magazine is only $1 a year, and if the proposed increase in postage rates goes into effect, it will put the magazine out of business.

There being no objection, the digest was referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DIGEST OF PRESENTATION BY THE ELKS MAGAZINE TO COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS IN OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED INCREASE IN SECOND-CLASS POSTAGE RATES

The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks is incorporated as a nonprofit corporation under the laws of the District of Columbia, and none of its net income inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual.

The order's charter provides "that the business of such corporation is benevolent and charitable, and to inculcate the principles of charity, justice, brotherly love, and fidelity; to promote the welfare and enhance the happiness of its members; to quicken the spirit of Americanism; to cultivate good fellowship; to perpetuate itself as a fraternal organization; and to provide for its government."

The Elks magazine is the official publication of the order. Any surplus above the actual cost of producing the magazine is applied to the patriotic, humanitarian, charitable, and civic activities of the order. In its 27 years of publication, the magazine has contributed $4,580,279.19 to the order for these purposes.

The Elks magazine is devoted largely to stimulating the members to support the charitable, patriotic, and humanitarian activities of the order, expenditures for which from 1923 to 1948, inclusive, totaled $64,197,430.85. In the year ended March 31, 1948, the sums spent for these purposes totaled $5,765,239.76. Among the activities promoted by the magazine are:

The Elks National Foundation, a $2,000,000 charitable trust, the income from which is used to further the charitable, educational, and benevolent activities of the order.

The Elks War Commission, which assumed full responsibility for recruitment of Army Construction Engineers and Navy Seabees, assisted in a program to recruit Navy and Army Air Corps mechanics personnel, recruited 1,300 nurses for Veterans' Administration, conducted a program of veterans' rehabilitation, and maintained 155 fraternal centers where men and women of the armed forces were provided recreation and entertainment.

The Elks National Veterans Service Commission, successor to the war commission, which provides entertainment for every disabled veteran still hospitalized, and also supplies material and equipment for occupational therapy.

The Elks magazine gives freely of its space to promote projects of the armed services, other governmental agencies, and many public charitable programs. In the past 3 years alone the Elks magazine has donated an average of more than a full page per month, with a total advertising value of over $50,000, to such agencies and programs as the United States Treasury and Coast Guard, Public Policy Committee, American Red Cross, American Cancer Committee, United Service Organization, community chest, Easter seals, March of Dimes, tuberculosis seals, American Heart Association, CARE.

If the proposed increase in postal rates became effective, the Elks magazine's postage bill would be increased to 600 percent. This would compel the magazine to cease publication or force a drastic curtailment in its size. In either event the charitable, educational, patriotic, and governmental activities conducted by the order would either cease or be greatly crippled, and, furthermore, the Government would lose postal revenue rather than increase it.

AMENDMENT OF FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT—RESOLUTION OF COUNCIL OF WINOOSKI, VT.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and myself, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Winooski, Vt., favoring the enactment of House bill 3190, to provide a minimum wage of 75 cents an hour, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION IN RE H. R. 3190, 75-CENT MINIMUM WAGE BILL

Whereas the general welfare, health, and happiness of the people, and especially the children of Winooski, are greatly dependent upon the workingman receiving a fair and decent wage to allow him to purchase the necessities of life for himself and his family, to provide for their necessary hospital and medical care in case of sickness, to afford for each child the opportunity of an education in the field of his choice; and

Whereas there is now pending before Congress H. R. 3190, a bill in amendment to the present Fair Labor Standards Act, calling, among other things, for a minimum wage of 75 cents per hour; and

Whereas the passage of said legislation will greatly benefit the majority of the people of Winooski, and guarantee to them a decent wage, future security, and pave the way for a better and brighter life; Now, therefore, it is hereby

Resolved by the City Council of the City of Winooski as follows:

1. That said council does hereby go on record as favoring the passage of H. R. 3190, without amendment, and as reported out by the House Labor Committee.

2. That the city clerk be, and he is hereby, instructed and directed to forward a copy of these resolutions to our two Senators and to our Representative in Congress for their attention and consideration.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION—RESOLUTION OF VIRGINIA, MINN., CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the Virginia, Minn., Chamber of Commerce, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 246, providing Federal aid to education, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved, That the Virginia, Minn., Chamber of Commerce advocate the passage of the bill now in the United States Senate, known as S. 246, more commonly known as the educational bill, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to United States Senators, EDWARD J. THYE and HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, and Congressman JOHN A. BLATNIK, with the request that they lend their effort toward the passage of this very vital bill.

Director Vern Anderson supported the foregoing resolution, and upon roll call the same was duly adopted.

Dated this 6th day of April 1949.

MISSOURI RIVER BASIN—RESOLUTION OF REPUBLICAN VALLEY CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, on Wednesday of this week I made a statement from this floor, asking support of the Senate in a request upon the Honorable Secretary of Agriculture for delivery to Congress without further delay of the report and recommendations for a Department of Agriculture Flood Control program for the 10 States comprising the Missouri River Basin.

In this connection, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD at this point, as part of my remarks a resolution unanimously adopted at the annual meeting of the Republican Valley Conservation Association, in session this week at McCook, Nebr.

The resolution forwarded to me in a telegram from Mr. Harry D. Strunk, association president, reads as follows:

Whereas extensive reclamation work is under way in the Republican River Basin under the Pick-Sloan plan;

Whereas it is our firm belief that precautionary measures must be taken to further prevent erosion and water run-off from table lands, thereby silting the major reservoirs and damaging lands under irrigation: Be it

Resolved, That the Republican Valley Conservation Association wholeheartedly supports the stand of Senator KENNETH S. WHERRY with regard to this program, and respectfully urges the Senate committee on appropriations to withhold department of Agriculture funds for fiscal 1950 until the Secretary of Agriculture submits the authorized Missouri River watershed plan for flood control to the Congress.

AMENDMENT OF CLASSIFICATION ACT OF 1923

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, I introduce for reference to the appropriate committee a classification bill which amends the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, at the request of the Government Employees' Organization.

This bill is a result of the experience gathered by the employees working under the old Classification Act. It grants a small increase in the minimum of the lower grades of the present Classification Act up to CAF-9. This bill provides an equitable method of handling the controversial down grading in efficiency. It grants to the employees of the departments or agencies the right of appeal, and such an appeal places the burden of proof for the action on the Government.

In the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944 and the appeal practice written into law, veterans have the right of appeal in this type of case to the Board of Appeals and Review of the United States Civil Service Commission. No such right is vested in the career nonveteran employees.

This is a bill that grants the same right of appeal to all Government employees.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] are joining with me in the introduction of this bill.

The bill (S. 1790) to amend the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, introduced by Mr. ECTON (for himself, Mr. LANGER, and Mr. HENDRICKSON), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

COOPERATIVE HEALTH PROGRAM

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill providing for a cooperative health program, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement prepared by me, together with a communication from the Cook County Hospital Committee of Grand Marias, Minn., signed by James V. Creech, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement and communication will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1805) to authorize grants and loans to cooperatives and nonprofit associations, operating medical and hospital care plans, for the acquisition, construction, and equipment of needed facilities, introduced by Mr. HUMPHREY, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The statement and communication are as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUMPHREY IN CONNECTION WITH THE INTRODUCTION OF THE COOPERATIVE HEALTH ACT

The purpose of this act is to assist cooperatives and other nonprofit associations to initiate and carry out voluntary, prepaid medical care plans for their members by means of Federal loans and grants to be used for the acquisition, construction, and equipping of much-needed clinical and health-center facilities.

The amount authorized for appropriation is $25,000,000 per year for each of five consecutive years. This would provide the necessary funds to finance about 250 plans per year, or an average of about 5 per State.

One of the greatest social needs in the country today is to find a way to bring about a better distribution of medical care. The problem is how to bring a doctor and the blessings of modern medicine to the shortage areas, particularly the rural area.

In the great Midwest we have learned from long experience that the doctors are failing to locate in rural areas and are moving to the larger cities, mainly for two reasons: (1) the lack of a modern medical workshop necessary for the practice of modern medicine, and (2) the lack of assured incomes from year to year, especially in times of low farm income.

The farm people in the Midwest and in other farm areas of the country are accustomed to working out their own problems in their own way. They have learned to work together to better their economic lot by the device of cooperation. Now they are interested in using that technique to help themselves in the field of health care.

These people are anxious to develop voluntary prepaid medical care plans on a community or area basis in order to provide the funds to assure adequate income to physicians who will locate in their area. However, the first step, and the most difficult one, is the obtaining of the necessary capital to finance the clinic or health center. Many of these organized groups have attempted to raise the necessary capital funds from their own resources, only to find that they cannot obtain a sufficient amount to pay for the high cost of construction. When they attempt to find financing in the usual channels, such as the financial institutions and insurance companies, they find that lending agencies are not interested in this type of investment.

In this situation the Federal Government can be of great assistance. Most of all, these people want the opportunity to borrow the necessary funds for the physical facility on a long-term basis at a low rate of interest. They have seen how successfully this has worked in the rural electrification program and they feel that there is no reason why the same technique cannot be applied in another field of great human need. However, as we all know, there are some very low income areas in the country which will not be able to repay a loan even under the most liberal terms. Therefore, my bill also provides for grants.

The Surgeon General would be authorized under this bill to survey the situation and upon application of a voluntary plan, he would determine whether to make a long-term loan or a grant, or a combination of both, to assist the community group in financing part or all of the cost of the health facility.

This bill simply helps people to help themselves. It fills a gap which is left open under our present program of assistance for hospital construction.

I need not point out to those of you from rural States that many rural areas are not able to finance the community share of the cost of a hospital, much less to sustain the hospital after it is built. What many of these communities need is a smaller facility such as a health center which is a clinic with five to twenty-five beds in the same structure. With such a facility, staffed with a few doctors, 80 to 90 percent of the day-to-day medical care needs of the area can be adequately cared for. Such a facility could take care also of maternity, injury, and emergency surgery cases free. The chronic and elective surgery cases not requiring immediate attention would be cared for in the hospital located in the neighboring town or county.

Three national rural health conferences, under the auspices of the American Medical Association, have studied this problem, and it is the consensus of the large farm organizations in the country that many of the problems of health they face can largely be worked out by the people themselves on a local community level. The granting of Federal assistance would give great impetus to the widespread demand for providing modern facilities to induce physicians to locate in rural areas.

However, this bill is not limited to rural areas alone. There is a shortage of adequate medical care at a cost within the reach of industrial workers in large cities. Many of our labor unions have large health and welfare funds. The membership of these unions desire comprehensive direct-service medical-care plans financed by these funds. Here again the great problem is to find the necessary capital to finance the clinic or health center to be located in the industrial areas of our large cities. This bill would suit the need in these areas as well.

From the standpoint of physicians, this Federal assistance would provide the means for increasing the availability to the medical profession of modern workshops which they themselves cannot finance. Also, because this bill stimulates self-help, prepayment plans, the funds will be available to assure physicians of the adequate incomes they so richly deserve.

It will be noted that the administration of this bill is in the hands of the Surgeon General under the Federal Security Administrator. The appropriation is relatively small, so that we would want to have efficient administration at the lowest possible cost. It is felt that if this assistance were appended to the Hill-Burton Act it would multiply the problems of administration through the States and increase the cost. The Hill-Burton Act refers throughout its language to hospitals, and it would probably require a rewriting of the bill to provide this special type of assistance. Also, many States have passed augmented and implemented acts under the Hill-Burton law which would take years to change and thus, in the meantime, hold back this type of assistance until it could be worked into the State hospital council system.

The need for this type of assistance is urgent. Many communities throughout the country would immediately apply for such assistance if it were available. There is no question but that this assistance will give great impetus to the rapid and sound development of voluntary plans throughout the country.

COOK COUNTY HOSPITAL COMMITTEE,
Grand Marais, Minn., April 9, 1949.

Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
3204 Coquelin Terrace,
Chevy Chase, Md.

DEAR MR. HUMPHREY: We have secured a tract of 10 acres of land here in the village of Grand Marais, and have had plans drawn and an estimate presented on costs of a hospital for this county; we have gone over the various methods of procuring funds with which to build and equip this hospital, but find that we would more than likely have to bond the county for a sum that we the taxpayers could not exist under, so we have been considering asking the United States Government for a direct grant for a sum that would do the trick.

You perhaps know that Cook County only has left one-eighth of the entire area for tax purposes, the other seven-eighths being owned by the State of Minnesota or in the Superior National Forest, and from which we do not receive any tax. Also this State and Government ownership of our lands has restricted our population growth as well as our assessed valuation. According to the 1940 count, we have 3,190 people in Cook County; but in the summer we have more than 10,000 people here all the time. Many of them own their summer homes here.

We are more than 80 miles from any form of medical center and with our lack of accommodations we only have one physician and one dentist and one public health nurse.

When our old folks become childish and unmanageable we have to send them to the insane asylum because we have no place to care for them; our sick folks are hauled either to Two Harbors, 85 miles away, or to Duluth, 110 miles distant; some of them have died on the way, others have been kept from a normal recovery by the long trip.

In the early days the United States Government gave grants of land to the railroads, and some of that land was situated here in Cook County, though we do not have any railroad, but I believe it would not be more than fair to us if we were given a like grant in value of money to build this contemplated hospital.

It will take about $175,000 to build and equip and have it in condition to receive and care for patients.

The State of Minnesota have us on their list as a must for a small hospital, but under the set-up they have we would only receive about one-third of the financing from them and the two-thirds would be left for us to raise by some other method, and that is barred to us by reason of the facts set forth as above.

Will you please let us hear what you think of our plan and whether or not you would be willing to back us in it.

Yours very truly,

JAMES V. CREECH,
For the Committee.

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR WOMEN—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS AND REPRINT OF SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 25

Mr. GILLETTE. CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, Senate bill 1710, introduced on April 27 by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] was referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. I ask that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Armed Services, of which the Senator from Massachusetts is a member. The bill is entitled: "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act to authorize leases of real or personal property by the War and Navy Departments, and for other purposes,' approved August 5, 1947, to provide for the making of payments in lieu of State and local taxation of certain property transferred to service departments."

Mr. President, from the title of the bill it is obvious that it may properly be referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs is discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it is referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

ALEX BAIL

The bill (H. R. 668) for the relief of Alex Bail was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I think this bill requires an explanation. The person who seeks relief is a former member of the Communist Party.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I am glad to give an explanation of the bill. I invite the attention of the Senate to the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is to grant the privilege of remaining in this country, despite his former membership in the Communist Party, to Alex Bail, a native of Russia lawfully admitted into the United States on August 21, 1910.

The alien presented a photostat of a page from the Daily Worker dated September 30, 1929. This photostat contains a notice of a decision of the Central Control Committee of the Communist Party that—

Alex Bail has been expelled from the C. P. of U. S. A. for aligning himself with the renegade Lovestone group, for taking active part in their disruptive and splitting activities, for issuing lying statements against the party, and for having used his position as district organizer of district 1, while pretending acceptance of the C. I. address, to disrupt the organization of the party in that district and to steal party records from the district office.

I further invite the attention of the Senate to facts which came before the committee. Alex Bail has been employed since 1939 by the Playthings, Jewelry, and Novelty Workers International Union in New York City. This is the right wing of the CIO union. His activities in the past 18 years have been strongly anti-Communist. It is readily understandable that deportation to Soviet Russia for him would be quite a tragedy.

Mr. President, this matter received very careful attention at the hands of the committee. I submit the question on the basis of the full detail of the report. It is the view of our committee that he should not be deported, because it would mean death to him if he were deported. That is the view of the committee, and I present it to the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, if Mr. Bail is worthy of staying within our borders, I wonder why we should not extend naturalization privileges to him.

Mr. McCARRAN. This deferment does not mean naturalization. It does not mean that he can be naturalized. It merely means that his deportation will be deferred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MARGARET GREGG DILNOT

The bill (H. R. 711) for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Gregg Dilnot was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, as I view it the legal effect of this bill is to waive the general provisions of the naturalization laws. Does the sponsor of the bill believe that it is well to pass bills of this type, laying the foundation for an unwise precedent under which American citizens would be permitted to go to foreign countries and exercise the right of franchise, and then expect to be granted American rights upon returning to this country?

Mr. McCARRAN. I must apologize to the Senator. My attention was distracted during the first part of his statement. Will the Senator kindly repeat his question?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I shall be glad to do so. As I view the bill, the legal effect of it is to waive the general provisions of the naturalization laws. While it may be morally wrong to deny the right to this particular individual, I am asking the question whether the sponsors of this measure believe that it is wise to lay the foundation for permitting American citizens to go to foreign countries, there exercise the right of franchise, and then expect to have the rights of American citizens upon their return to this country.

Mr. McCARRAN. I would not want to create such a precedent, but I do not think this particular case would establish such a precedent in that regard. I hope my answer is sufficiently explicit. The committee thought that in this case there was sufficient justification for considering the case by itself and extending the right.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I ask the distinguished Senator if the same general statement applies to Calendar No. 232, House bill 1460, which will be reached later during the call of the calendar.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wonder if the Senator would permit us to take that matter up when we get to it.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of House bill 711?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MAY K. Y. MOK, FREDERICK W. S. MOK, AND VINCENT W. C. MOK

The bill (H. R. 1010) for the relief of Mrs. May K. Y. Mok, Frederick W. S. Mok, and Vincent W. C. Mok, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ADA M. RYAN

The bill (H. R. 1035) for the relief of Mrs. Ada M. Ryan was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I note that the party seeking relief under this bill was concerned in a crime involving moral turpitude in Canada. I am wondering whether we should not have an explanation as to the subsequent good conduct of Mrs. Ada M. Ryan.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the entire matter involved in the question of the able Senator is set out in the letter to the chairman from Mr. Peyton Ford, Assistant to the Attorney General. I think the explanation is more explicit than I could make it, and comes from a better authority than mine. I hope the Senator, if he sees fit to object, will read that explanation, and then perhaps he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Is the distinguished Senator satisfied with the conduct of Ada M. Ryan since her entry into this country?

Mr. McCARRAN. That was the conclusion of the committee which had the bill in charge. The bill was gone into quite at length. We received the advice which is published in the report, from the Department of Justice, over the signature of Mr. Peyton Ford, Assistant to the Attorney General. I think the bill merits the approval of this body.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JEANNETTE AND JESUS ESTEVA AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 1041) for the relief of Jeannette and Jesus Esteva and their four children was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Nevada this question: Do not these bills and other similar relief bills discriminate against persons seeking entry into the United States under immigration quotas, and in favor of the persons mentioned in the bills, who are now in the United States, and whose original admission was limited to a temporary visit—in this particular case, 60 days from September 6, 1946?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I hope I understand the Senator's question. These people risked their lives for American citizens. The record includes letters from a United States naval officer and several American citizens who were interned as prisoners of war by the Japanese in Manila. These persons speak favorably of the adult aliens and credit them with having saved the lives of many Americans who were imprisoned by the Japanese. They state that the alien father and mother, at the risk of torture and death to themselves and their children, procured food and medical supplies at their own expense, and augmented these purchases by denying themselves and their own children of their rations, in order that they might render aid to the interned Americans.

I may say that it was the acts of these people in saving the lives of American citizens who had been interned in Japan that seemed to warrant their being considered favorably in this connection.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Then, I take it that the Senator from Nevada does not feel that there will be discrimination.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not think so.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1041) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAWRENCE G. McCARTHY

The bill (H. R. 1052) for the relief of Lawrence G. McCarthy was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIA VELTRI MAGNONE

The bill (H. R. 1079) for the relief of Maria Veltri Magnone was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I notice that the Attorney General recommends an amendment to this bill, but the amendment was not adopted by the committee. A similar situation exists as to a bill two numbers before this one on the calendar. The report on the bill contains a letter from the Assistant to the Attorney General, and in the letter the following statement is included:

If the bill is to receive favorable consideration, however, it is suggested that it be amended as follows.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, let me ask to what bill the Senator from Ohio is addressing his remarks.

Mr. TAFT. Actually I have read from the report on the bill which previously has been acted upon, Calendar 229, House bill 1052.

Did the committee consider the amendment recommended by the Attorney General, and reject it; or should such an amendment be adopted?

Mr. McCARRAN. I may say to the Senator that so far as I am presently advised, without refreshing my recollection, we considered the amendment, and it was not considered as being appropriate for adoption to the bill.

Mr. TAFT. I notice that a similar amendment was recommended for three or four other bills of the same nature. In respect to the same issue, as it is involved in these several bills, the same amendment has been recommended—for instance, in this case, for House bill 1079, Calendar 230.

Mr. McCARRAN. The bill as it appears this year is in the form as recommended, with the amendment included. But the report follows the old report, as presented in a previous Congress. The bill now carries the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1079) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA MALONE AND RITA ANDERSON

The bill (H. R. 1101) for the relief of Anna Malone and Rita Anderson was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. SILVIA MAPELLI

The bill (H. R. 1460) for the relief of Mrs. Silvia Mapelli was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, is this the bill to which the Senator was referring a moment ago?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. President, as to this bill, the files of the Immigration and Naturalization Service of this Department disclose that the beneficiary of the bill is the widow of a naturalized citizen of the United States and is a native of Italy, having been born in that country on February 12, 1878. She came to the United States in 1905, and remained in this country until 1937, when she went to Italy to visit her aged father and other relatives in that country. She now desires to return to the United States, but having lost her United States citizenship by voting in an Italian election in 1946, she is required, under existing law, to obtain a quota immigration visa in order to do so. She is unable to obtain the required visa, however, due to the fact that the Italian quota is preempted for a period of 1 year.

It appears from the testimony of her friends and relatives in this country that Mrs. Mapelli lost her husband, her only child, and her grandchild, through death within a period of 13 months and that she was advised by her physician to visit her native country for her health's sake. She was prevented by the war from returning to the United States, and it has been stated that she suffered great hardship during the German occupation of her native village.

The committee feels that because of the circumstances in this particular case she should be repatriated.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator if this is one of the bills about which the Attorney General of the United States made some inquiry.

Mr. McCARRAN. As I recall, the Senator is correct.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Does the bill meet with the requirements or suggestions or approval of the Attorney General?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, Mrs. Mapelli is a citizen of the State of Colorado. I appreciate the statement the Senator from Nevada has made in her behalf. I can personally vouch for the truth and accuracy of everything he has said, and I can assure the Senate that this lady is worthy of whatever consideration we can give her. I vouch for her good character and loyalty to this country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, it seems to me that the committee has uniformly ignored the recommendations of the Attorney General. In this case, again, the Attorney General states in a letter that we should substitute certain language, which was not substituted by the committee. There may be good reason for the action of the committee; but I observe that the letter of the Attorney General states that it is believed by the Attorney General that the bill should be amended by such an amendment as the following:

> Notwithstanding the quota limitations now provided by law, a quota immigration visa may be issued to Mrs. Silvia Mapelli, provided she is otherwise admissible to the United States under the immigration laws.

I take it that the action proposed in this case would give Mrs. Mapelli the right to enter the United States under the quota limitations, thus cutting down by one number the remaining admissions under the quota. I do not know whether that is true, but I wonder whether the committee has considered the recommendations of the Attorney General. It seems to me that in five bills, as we have considered the bills on the calendar up to this point, recommendations of that sort have been made by the Attorney General, but the committee has not paid any attention at all to them.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will read the bill, he will find that it carries the recommendation of the Department of Justice; and the same is true in all these cases. The report contains a letter of a former date, in some instances addressed to the House of Representatives and in some instances addressed to the Senate Judiciary Committee. We attach the letter to the report; but the recommendations of the Department of Justice in each instance have been carried into effect in the new bill, as introduced in this Congress.

Mr. TAFT. I believe that is not correct, so far as I can ascertain in regard to House bill 1460, calendar No. 232. I do not see any reference whatever in it to the quota.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is not true with respect to the last bill which has been called, the one for the relief of Mrs. Mapelli.

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is not true in that case.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Colorado, I shall not object to this bill; but I wish to serve notice now that in the future I shall feel compelled to object to such private relief bills unless it is provided that the quota be reduced by one number in each case, so that the person to be admitted will be admitted within the quota.

Some years ago we adopted the principle of deducting one number from the quota whenever we passed such private relief bills. If we pass such bills without reducing the quota, that will mean that we shall be greatly increasing immigration into the United States.

I respectfully request of the Senator that he see to it that such deductions are made from the quotas.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, without exception, other than in very rare cases, of which this bill is one, we do follow the principle of deducting from the quota.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. But in this case, this old lady, who has been a citizen once, desires to return to this country to die here as a citizen of the United States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I shall not object in this particular case; but I hope in the future the Senator will observe the recommendations of the Department.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. In the Senator's judgment how many exceptions have been made in granting relief, in addition to the quotas, since the Eighty-first Congress was convened?

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator mean up to date?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes—how many, in excess of the quota?

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator mean, not reduced from the quotas?

Mr. WHERRY. That is right.

Mr. McCARRAN. My recollection is, and I am so advised by counsel for the committee, that this is the only one.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1460) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER DROZD

The bill (H. R. 1508) for the relief of Peter Drozd was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRAM B. TELLEKAMP

The bill (H. R. 1591) for the relief of Bram B. Tellekamp was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Nevada a question with reference to this bill. The legal effect of it is, as I view it, to permit an alien to be considered lawfully admitted to the United States retroactively to the date of his original entry. It provides for proper quota deduction, of course. But with respect to this measure, and in the history of the case, the individual came into this country with the knowledge and consent of officers of the United States of America who were in charge of this particular flight. I should like to have a brief explanation of whether that phase of the matter was considered, and of the possible implications of a measure of this kind, in view of those circumstances.

Mr. McCARRAN. I may say to the able Senator that the arrival of this minor, if he is a minor, when he arrived in the United States at Hickam Field, Honolulu, T. H., on March 18, 1947, aboard a United States Army airplane from Guam, took place under these circumstances: Investigation has revealed that the alien boarded the aircraft at Guam with the knowledge and consent of the officers in charge of the flight, and was brought to Honolulu without being manifested either as a passenger, a crew member, or as a stowaway. He has testified that after his arrival he spent 2 days in a transient barrack at the airfield and then approached an Army officer for assistance, and was turned over to the military police.

Since very shortly after his arrival in this country the young man has resided in Honolulu at the home of Mr. Robert Thurston, a newspaper publisher. It has been stated that Mr. and Mrs. Thurston are interested in him because of his resemblance to their own son of like age who died in the armed forces during World War II. Mrs. Thurston has stated that he is a very inteiligent young man with a good background. He has been enrolled as a full-time student at the Punahou School in Honolulu, where he is maintaining an A or B average in all subjects, with one exception. The matter is laid before the Senate. We thought, notwithstanding that the Senate may not concur in the view, that we were probably indulging in humanitarian considerations, and that we were justified under the circumstances.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I trust that the Senator from Kansas will not object to the bill. I have some knowledge of the facts in this case. In my opinion this is one of the most meritorious of all the private bills on the calendar. As I understand, the young man was a war refugee, both of his parents, I think, having been lost when the Japanese attacked the Dutch Indies. He finally escaped and found refuge with some American troops when still a very young boy. The Americans have practically adopted him. They were responsible for bringing him in. I understand he is a very worthy youth, in whom a number of very prominent citizens are interested. There is a deduction from the quota in this case. I am quite sure he will make as good if not a better citizen than one who might come in under the quota.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Georgia, I am in sypathy with this young man's case, but I was wondering about this phase of it, namely, whether there may have been collusion on the part of officers of this Government and whether this case would establish a precedent for future action of this kind. That was the thing I was really concerned about. I do not say I shall object, but I should like to know whether the committee has considered the implication that might follow, and whether the committee thinks there are extenuating circumstances. If so, I shall withdraw the objection.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am sure there are extenuating circumstances. The Senator will recall that during the war and immediately after the war the troops returning brought a great many young people whom they had adopted, more or less, as the armies moved from Italy or from Germany or from France, and almost without exception, in all those cases, the Congress enacted private bills providing that such persons could remain in this country.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I should like to voice the sentiment expressed by the distinguished Senator from Georgia. I am not acquainted at all with the young man in the case, but I do know very well the publisher of the Honolulu Advertiser. There is not a finer family anywhere in the United States of America than the people who have this young man in charge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1591) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KIRA AND NINA GRIGORIEFF

The bill (H. R. 1629) for the relief of Kira and Nina Grigorieff was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RALPH MARTIN ELZINGRE, ALSO KNOWN AS RALPH SEAWELL

The bill (H. R. 1876) for the relief of Ralph Martin Elzingre, also known as Ralph Seawell, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, the committee report in this case, on page 1, states that the alien has been legally adopted by his relatives, yet there is nothing further to indicate, in the letter to the House Committee on the Judiciary, from the Assistant Attorney General, which is incorporated in the report, that he has been so adopted. The facts actually seem to indicate that he had entered by means of a deliberate falsehood or lie. I think it proper to ask if this is not another example of an alien gaining entry through false information, in order ultimately to obtain citizenship.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator from Nevada able to give the Senator from New Jersey any information on the point?

Mr. McCARRAN. Is there a question propounded?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Yes. I ask whether this is not another example of an alien furnishing false information in order to gain admittance to our country.

Mr. McCARRAN. The answer is, if I understand the Senator's question, that it does not establish a precedent. The circumstances are such that the committee thought its action warranted. Let me say in this regard that each one of the bills is considered in detail by the committee, first by the staff of the committee, which screens them, and then by the committee. We get a report from the Department of Justice before we finally pass on the bills. There are in all the bills some particular circumstance surrounding the incident that seems to warrant favorable consideration by the committee, and so we report it to the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I understand the procedure, but it seems to me that in this case there has been an entry through the medium of a deliberate falsehood. It was that point about which I raised the issue.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say to the Senator that the records of our committee show that the boy has been legally adopted, although that may not appear in the report, it is in the files of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1876) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEN LUKE POND, SHAO HUNG POND, AND DAVID YAT WEI POND—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1878) for the relief of Ben Luke Pond, Shao Hung Pond, and David Yat Wei Pond was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, the only question I have to raise in this particular case is that the report, as I read it, indicates that the Department of Justice has refused to recommend the enactment of this bill, and yet we are asked to pass it. I should like to have some explanation why, over the objection of the Department of Justice, this bill should be passed.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is a bill which the House passed. The alien involved first entered the United States in 1910 as a student and remained here until 1926, when he returned to China. In 1919 he received the degree of bachelor of science in engineering from the University of Missouri. In 1920 he received a civil engineer's degree from Cornell University. From 1923 until 1926, he studied practical automobile engineering at the Ford Motor Co. in Detroit. On his return to China he taught at the University of Yunan.

Mr. President, while, in this particular case, the Department of Justice did make a recommendation, the committee used its own judgment and saw fit to go contrary to the recommendation of the Department of Justice. We do not consider ourselves bound by recommendations of the Department of Justice. We exercise the best judgment we have on the facts which are before us. This is one of those cases in which we exercised our judgment contrary to the views of the Department.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Would the Senator have any objection to the bill going over until the next calendar day?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; certainly not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MRS. JULIA BALINT

The bill (H. R. 679) to authorize the admission of Mrs. Julia Balint to the United States was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I see nothing in the report to give any assurance that this alien, if admitted, will not become a public charge. I am wondering if the distinguished Senator will give us some assurance on that point.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the only answer I can give to the Senator is that the question of whether the facts in any of these cases indicate that the party might become a public charge is always looked into by the committee. In this case, as in other cases, it was the judgment of the committee that there was no chance for this particular alien to become a public charge.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I have no objection.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, what concerns me with regard to this bill is that there seems to be an increase in the quota, without any reason. In the previous bill there was no reason whatever to admit the aliens except that they wanted to come in and the quota was taken up for 3 years. In this case the original bill provides for charging one additional against the quota. The committee has amended the bill so that there is no longer a charge against the quota, which also seems to be contrary to the recommendation of the department.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this bill presents the case of a nonquota immigrant. The husband, who was a citizen, has either passed away or has completely disappeared, so far as the records show, and therefore the person involved wishes to come in as a nonquota immigrant.

Mr. TAFT. I do not see why she should be a nonquota immigrant. She is not nonquota under any statute relating to quotas. She is a nonquota immigrant only if the committee makes her so. Otherwise, she could not be admitted at all.

Mr. McCARRAN. Her husband was a citizen. If he is alive, he is still a citizen.

Mr. TAFT. But if her husband is not alive, she is not a citizen.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not know whether he is alive or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 679) to authorize the admission of Mrs. Julia Balint to the United States, which had been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert:

That for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Mrs. Julia Balint, who would be entitled to nonquota immigration status but for the death or disappearance of her United States citizen husband, shall, if otherwise admissable to the United States under the immigration laws, be deemed to be a nonquota immigrant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 528) to amend the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 so as to authorize the payment of fair compensation to persons contracting to deliver certain strategic or critical minerals or metals in cases of failure to recover reasonable costs, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I should like to have this bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EMPLOYMENT OF TEMPORARY ASSISTANTS TO THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

The resolution (S. Res. 101) authorizing the Committee on Banking and Currency to employ temporary assistants and make additional expenditures, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have been asked by the senior Senator from North Dakota to object to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on the conclusion of the call of the Calendar this resolution be made the first order of business.

Mr. WHERRY. That will be perfectly agreeable.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, at the conclusion of the call of the calendar the order of business is the District of Columbia tax bill. I object to displacing that bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the senior Senator from Arizona reported the resolution, and the senior Senator from Nebraska is a member of the Committee on Rules and Administration, I should like to ask whether the Senator from Arizona desires to explain the resolution.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, we have a budget submitted by the Committee on Banking and Currency in which it is proposed to spend the following sums of money on three subcommittees:

For the Subcommittee on Banking Credit, $10,000; the Subcommittee on Small Business, $30,000; the Subcommittee on Economic Stabilization, $20,000.

Those sums make up the total of the amount to be appropriated.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. It was approved by the entire Banking and Currency Committee membership, both Republicans and Democrats. The original amount has been before the Committee on Rules and Administration for several months. The distinguished Senator from Nebraska, the minority leader, requested that it be amended for the purpose of obtaining a proper break-down, which was done. I wanted the Senate to know that it has met with the approval of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Rules and Administration, provided a proper break-down was made. At the same time, we also presented a resolution with reference to the Joint Economic Committee for approximately $30,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and for the sole purpose of clarifying the record, I stated a moment ago that I had been asked to object to the consideration of Calendar No. 242. I was in error in that statement. I had reference to another calendar number.

I should like to clarify one thing. The resolution does provide the necessary funds to continue the operation of the subcommittee in the interest of small business; is that correct?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct as to the Subcommittee on Small Business of the Banking and Currency Committee. It is not the intention of the Banking and Currency Committee to interfere in the business of other committees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to say that I am very much in favor of the adoption of this resolution. However, I want to clarify the record with reference to the statement which the Senator from South Carolina has just made regarding jurisdiction, and I want to read into the RECORD a very brief statement, and to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed during the Eighty-first Congress, until February 15, 1950, to make a full and complete study and investigation of such problems as it may deem proper relating to (1) adequacy of banking and credit legislation, including (A) securities and exchange problems; (B) encouragement of venture capital investment in new enterprises; (C) problems relating to the Federal Reserve System and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, such as credit policies, bank reserves, marginal requirements, merger of Federal Reserve banks with State banks, and deposit insurance; and (D) adequacy of present monetary system; (2) small business, including (A) problems threatening the continued existence of small business enterprises, (B) financial aid to small business enterprises, (C) financial aid to veterans operating small business enterprises, and (D) adequacy of Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan authority and extensions thereof; and (3) economic stabilization, including (A) studies of prices and production, (B) allocations of scarce materials, (C) construction of housing, (D) disposal of permanent and temporary war housing, and (E) proposed amendments to the rent control act and administration of rent control legislation.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first Congress, until February 15, 1950, (1) to make such expenditures as it deems advisable; (2) to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable; and (3) with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of any of the departments or agencies of the Government.

SEC. 3. Expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $60,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the Chairman of the Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I wish to make for the RECORD a very brief statement, I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution, and to explain briefly the purpose of my amendment, which I believe will be of particular interest to the chairman of every standing legislative committee of the Senate.

I am sure no one will dispute the statement that each and every one of the fifteen standing committees of the Senate at one time or another has dealt with the "problems of American small business enterprises," and will continue to deal with them in the future. Speaking very frankly, in the light of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, and in the light of long-established precedents and customs antedating the 1946 law, there is a very serious doubt in my mind that the Banking and Currency Committee can lay greater claim to jurisdiction over the "problems of American small business enterprises" than the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The Legislative Reorganization Act provides that the Committee on the Judiciary shall have jurisdiction over matters relating to "protection of trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies." I am not a lawyer, and to me that means simply the protection of small business against unlawful and monopolistic practices of big business.

Now take the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The Reorganization Act says it shall have jurisdiction over legislation and matters relating to "interstate and foreign commerce generally." Under that heading, the committee is constantly dealing with legislation and matters directly affecting the welfare of the little businessman.

The Committee on Banking and Currency, by the terms of the Reorganization Act, is given jurisdiction over matters relating to "financial aid to commerce and industry, other than matters relating to such aid which are specifically assigned to other committees under this rule," and matters relating to "control of prices of commodities, rents, or services." Note the specific limitation on jurisdiction over matters relating to "aid to commerce and industry": First, the "aid" must be financial aid; second, the matter of such "financial aid" must not impinge upon matters that are specifically assigned to other committees.

As I have already stated, all our standing committees have dealt, and will continue to deal, with particular problems affecting small business. In that connection, it is interesting to note that the very first resolution creating a Special Small-Business Committee, Senate Resolution 298, Seventy-sixth Congress, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and I am sure that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, who favorably reported that resolution from the committee, feels very strongly that there are many matters affecting small business which, by the terms of the Legislative Reorganization Act, properly belong in his committee.

Now, Mr. President, I want to make one final observation. If we are going to continue the study and investigation of the problems of American small-business enterprises under the wing of the Committee on Banking and Currency, there should be, it seems to me, a very clear and very definite understanding on two points: First, it should be fully understood that the other standing committees of the Senate are not surrendering to the Banking and Currency Committee any jurisdiction they now possess by reason of custom, precedent, and the Legislative Reorganization Act over the problems of American small business.

Second, when the Banking and Currency Committee launches into a study or investigation of some small-business problem and comes up with a legislative proposal as a solution to the problem, I feel very strongly that such legislative proposal should be referred to the standing committee having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the proposal. In other words, if the Senate should approve the pending resolution, I do not concede that such action would give to the Banking and Currency Committee any greater jurisdiction than it heretofore has possessed. Nor do I concede that if the Banking and Currency Committee proceeds with some comprehensive study or investigation of a small-business problem that fact in itself gives them any claim to jurisdiction over the legislation that may thereafter be introduced to implement the committee's recommendations.

I believe we should have a complete understanding on the points I have raised. For that reason, I am proposing a single amendment, which merely makes clear that any legislation coming out of a study of small business shall be referred to the appropriate committee, and not arbitrarily to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. President, I send to the desk my clarifying amendment, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 4. Irrespective of the scope and nature of any hearings held or investigations conducted by the committee with respect to the problems of small business enterprises, the authority granted by this resolution is not intended to, nor shall it, increase, enlarge, or expand the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency as set forth in paragraph (d) of section (1) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I certainly have no objection to the amendment, but it would not change the resolution we presented. We have no intention of interfering with the regular jurisdiction of other committees, or of considering or reporting legislation within the jurisdiction of other committees. So, if the Senator wishes to propose the amendment, I am perfectly willing that it should be agreed to, but in my judgment it would not change the pending resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object to this resolution, because the distinguished Senator from South Carolina has time and time again stated on the floor of the Senate that the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency will operate only within the provisions of the Banking and Currency authorization.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is the law.

Mr. WHERRY. With which I totally agree. But I also am in sympathy with all standing committees in the difficulty they are having and will continue to have. The action proposed absolutely confirms the argument I made in the Senate when I asked for the continuation of the Special Small Business Committee, because it is practically impossible to set up a subcommittee of any legislative committee and have it perform all the functions necessary to be performed by a Special Small Business Committee of the Senate. It proves conclusively the argument I have made time and time again on the floor of the Senate was correct. But I am not objecting.

Mr. MAYBANK. There is much merit in what the Senator says, but on behalf of the Committee on Banking and Currency, as its chairman, I wish to say that we get more requests from small business than does any other committee. Almost daily or weekly we refer requests from small business to the Committee on the Judiciary and to the Committee on Armed Services and to the other regular standing committees, and it is not our intention to do anything but attend to our own business. Nevertheless, since we first called this matter to the attention of the Senate, and had a long debate on the question of the continuation of the Small Business Committee, a resolution for which we reported to the Senate, we have received many requests from the average small-business man, and in many instances the staff of the committee, I might say, has gotten allotments for them, of steel, or rayon, or other materials desired by small industries. We are getting mail involving all types of problems besetting small-business enterprises, and when a particular problem does not fall within the jurisdiction of our committee I am glad to refer it to any standing committee which has jurisdiction over the particular problem involved. We need money to carry on further in order to help small-business men, because they are writing to our committee, and are sending their requests to us. I wanted to make that perfectly clear.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I think I have used only 2 minutes of the 5 minutes at my disposal.

I should like to say, in conclusion, that I am not going to object to the consideration of this resolution. I approved it as a member of the Committee on Rules and Administration. Certainly the small-business men of America have to turn to some committee in the Senate for help to do the very thing the subcommittee will now do.

I desire to say once more that we cannot effectively have a small-business committee of the Senate unless we have an over-all committee which cuts across the lines of all legislative committees. We have had such a committee for the past 6 years. This Congress has folded up that committee, and now we will attempt to carry out the wishes of the businessmen by putting the responsibility on this subcommittee, that subcommittee, and the other subcommittee, and what is everybody's business is nobody's business. I do not think it will work as effectively as if we had a small-business committee operating for all the businessmen. The matter will be handled by the respective subcommittees of the different committees of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "Resolution to investigate problems relating to banking and credit legislation, small business, and economic stabilization."

INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 26) to investigate certain economic problems was considered and agreed to as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation into the following problems of the economy:

(1) The problem of investment, including, but not limited to, (A) the role of investment institutions in the investment markets, in industry, and in the economy generally; (B) changes in sources of investment funds and the reason therefor; (C) availability and character of investment funds for national, local, and independent enterprise and the effect of such investment or lack of investment upon different classes or size groups in industry; (D) and needs, by industry, for various types of capital.

(2) The problem of the effectiveness and coordination of monetary, credit, and fiscal policies in dealing with general economic policy.

(3) The problem of low-income families in relation to economic instability.

(4) The problem of unemployment trends and their significance in current economic analysis.

SEC. 2. The joint committee shall report to the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than December 31, 1949, the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this resolution, the joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized (1) to appoint and fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, and clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation prescribed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties; and (2) to hold such hearings; to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first Congress prior to January 1, 1950; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer oaths; to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done; and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services in reporting hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman or vice chairman of the joint committee and shall be served by any person designated by them.

SEC. 4. The expenses of the joint committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $30,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers signed by the chairman. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate out of the contingent fund of the Senate, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in the amount of one-half of disbursements so made.

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS OF SECTION 1 (c), CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT, TO CERTAIN INVOLUNTARILY SEPARATED EMPLOYEES—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 988) to extend the benefits of section 1 (c) of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to employees who were involuntarily separated during the period from July 1, 1945, to July 1, 1947, after having rendered 25 years of service but prior to attainment of age 55, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that there is an identical House bill on the calendar, House bill 997, Calendar No. 302.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, Senate bill 988, in section 1 (c) provides:

> Any officer or employee to whom this act applies, after having rendered at least 25 years of service computed as prescribed in section 5 of this act, shall, upon involuntary separation from the service not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency, be paid an immediate life annuity computed as provided in section 4 of this act reduced by one-fourth of 1 percent for each full month such officer or employee is under the age of 60 years.

The bill gives to the employees who were separated from the service involuntarily the right to retire after 25 years of service. The Civil Service Commission recommends the bill because it would cost very little, and at the same time would give such individuals the right to retire, because in many instances they canot secure employment. The Bureau of the Budget has also recommended the bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. How long must a person have served to secure the benefits of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Twenty-five years.

Mr. ELLENDER. And then if such a person has lost his job, the Senator said——

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If such a person has lost his job through no fault of his own he receives the benefits of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why was this particular section of the Retirement Act made retroactive when the other sections are not touched?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am sorry, but I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why was this particular section of the Retirement Act singled out to be made retroactive 2 years? Why was this particular section selected and made retroactive? Under the present law employees can retire after 25 years of service, if they are separated from the service, but the bill, as I read it, merely extends back for 2 years, prior to July 1, 1947, one particular section of the act.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. There is a law which takes care of the situation up to that time, and this bill takes care of those who were involuntarily separated during the period from July 1, 1945, to July 1, 1947—between those years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The law took care of such individuals prior to that time, and the same law still takes care of them. Is that not true?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why is it necessary, by this bill, to make the law retroactive for 2 years if that situation is already taken care of.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think the Senator from Delaware misunderstood me. The bill takes care of a group not taken care of by any prior law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But they were taken care of before. Why is the group with 25 years of service selected? What is going to be done with an individual who has served 24 years?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. He will have to wait until the 25 years are up. An individual who has served 23 years will have to wait until the 25-year period is ended. And the same is true of one who has served for 22 or 21 years or for any other period less than 25 years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if I may, I should like to explain one point to the Senator. The whole purpose of the bill primarily is to give to some persons who worked in national ordnance plants the same benefits other employees have. The persons in question were separated from their employment during the period from July 1, 1945, to July 1, 1947, after the war was over. The bill would give them the same retirement benefits that other employees have under the law.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. My objection is that we considered this whole question last year. We went over the whole subject scientifically at that time. Now it is proposed to make the law retroactive here and make it retroactive there for the benefit of some special group. In view of the fact that we adopted the over-all plan last year, after a great deal of discussion, I do not see why it is now proposed to begin to chisel on that particular plan and give an increase here and an increase there to particular persons who do not happen to receive quite as much as they hoped to receive under the retirement act.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to answer the Senator's statement by saying that from time to time we will find persons who have not been treated exactly fairly under the law, and it will be necessary for us to take action to correct such situations. The bill deals with employees who stayed with the Government because the Government wanted them to stay and work after the war was over. Should we treat them differently than we treat those who did not remain and work? That is the only question here. Only a small group of individuals is involved. It is true that last year we did pass a law to take care of some employees, but should we penalize certain employees because they remained on the job and worked when the Government asked them to continue to work? That is the question before the Senate at the present time. If any Senators want to penalize those who remained at the request of the Government, let them object to the bill and let it go over. But by doing so Senators are penalizing a group of employees that remained and served the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We considered the matter last year, and no question was then raised about these persons. At that time the Senate did not think one particular group should be selected and treated differently than others. I feel the same way about the matter as I did last year, namely, that it singles out one particular group for special attention, and, therefore, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT RELATING TO SERVICE CREDITS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1023) to amend section 9 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, so as to grant credit in accordance with such section for service for which, through inadvertence, no deductions from salary are made.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill seems to be to grant credit in accordance with section 9 of the Civil Service Retirement Act, to a civil-service employee for service for which, through inadvertence, no deductions from salary were made. The bill as drawn does not impose any responsibility at all on an employee. He can be careless and negligent. I should like to offer an amendment at this time to put some degree of responsibility on the employee. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey a question. Who pays in the amount that was not deducted through the error? Is that made up by appropriation from the Federal Treasury, or does the employee recompense the retirement fund for the amount?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I did not hear the first part of the Senator's question.

Mr. RUSSELL. The bill provides that the credit is granted even though no deductions from salary were made.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. That, of course, imposes a greater burden on the retirement fund, because it would increase the amount of the retirement that the person would draw by giving him credit for deductions which were not made. I should like to know whether the recipient of the retirement benefit pays in the amount which, because of error, was not deducted, or whether it comes out of the Treasury by appropriation.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Is the Senator's question directed to the bill or to the amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is directed to the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. The chairman of the committee can probably answer the Senator's question better than I can.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If the Senator will read the second paragraph of the report, he will find the following language:

By the terms of the existing retirement act, an employee securing a status thereunder is entitled to credit for all prior service during which such status did not attach. In case there is involved civilian service after August 1, 1920, the effective date of the original retirement law, the employee has the option of depositing in the retirement fund the proper percentage deductions with interest. Should he fail to make the deposit, the annuity otherwise due upon retirement is reduced by 10 percent of the deposit figure.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then the answer is that the employee who would benefit would have to make the deposit.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, it is proposed to strike out line 8 and insert "on the part of the employing agency and such error being made without the knowledge of the employee affected by the mistake."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of section 9 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "including any case in which such deductions are required to be made but are not made due to error on the part of the employing agency and such error being made without the knowledge of the employee affected by the mistake."

FORFEITURE OF CERTAIN CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ANNUITY RIGHTS

The bill (S. 1229) to enable certain former officers or employees of the United States separated from the service subsequent to January 23, 1942, to elect to forfeit their rights to civil-service retirement annuities and to obtain in lieu thereof returns of their contributions with interest, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last paragraph of section 8 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That any such officer or employee who has completed less than 20 years' civilian service may elect to forfeit his right to such annuity and elect to receive in lieu thereof the amount credited to his individual account together with interest compounded on December 31 of each year at the rate of 4 percent to the date of his separation or December 31, 1947, whichever may be the earlier, and at the rate of 3 percent for any period thereafter before April 1, 1948: Provided further, That if the separation of such officer or employee was involuntary, not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency, the total amount of deductions, with such interest, shall be returned."

AMENDMENT OF ALASKA RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACT—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1359) to repeal the provisions of the Alaska Railroad Retirement Act of June 29, 1936, as amended, and sections 91 to 107 of the Canal Zone Code, and to extend the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to officers and employees to whom such provisions are applicable, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, it will be recalled that we have a great many retirement systems throughout the Government. A few years ago the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] called that fact to our attention. An effort is being made to consolidate the various retirement systems. This bill would consolidate two systems. It will be noted that it involves the Alaska Railroad Retirement Act and the Canal Zone Code. It would effect a consolidation of the retirement systems.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator if it is proposed to consolidate the two systems under the same formula, or whether more liberal terms will be provided?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It will be found that in a consolidation of systems some systems provide more benefits than others. They are not all exactly the same.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am speaking of the future.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator will find that the benefits are more liberal in the Canal Zone because of the conditions in that part of the world. We could not have the same retirement system there that we have in the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, am I to understand from the Senator from South Carolina that this bill would provide a new formula for a particular group, under the present act?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is in effect a new formula. In nearly all consolidations we find that payments by employees have been made under different agreements. It is impossible to have the same formula in all fields.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the movement to consolidate systems, but I am opposed to opening up a new formula. I therefore ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EXEMPTION OF ARTIFICIAL LIMBS FROM DUTY IF IMPORTED FOR PERSONAL USE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3932) to exempt artificial limbs from duty if imported for personal use and not for sale.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to this bill, at the suggestion of the customs officials.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 6, after the word "and" it is proposed to insert the word "limb" preceding the word "braces."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1527) to provide for home rule and reorganization in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

COMMUTING ANNUITIES—SENECA AND SIX NATIONS OF NEW YORK

The bill (S. 187) to provide for the settlement of certain obligations of the United States to the Indians of New York was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to enter into negotiations with the tribal councils of the Six Nations of New York with a view to the settlement, by lump-sum payment, of the obligation of the United States to pay to the Indians of the Six Nations of New York a permanent annuity in clothing and other useful articles under the provisions of article 6 of the treaty of November 11, 1794, with such Indians.

SEC. 2. The Secretary is further authorized and directed to enter into negotiations with the tribal council of the Seneca Nation of New York with a view to the settlement, by lump-sum payment, of the obligation of the United States to pay to the Indians of such nation a permanent annuity in lieu of interest on stock under the provisions of the act of February 19, 1831 (4 Stat. 442).

SEC. 3. Upon the conclusion of the negotiations authorized under this act the Secretary shall make a report to the Congress concerning the results thereof, and upon the making of an appropriation therefor by the Congress, shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Six Nations of New York and the Seneca Nation of New York, respectively, the amounts agreed upon pursuant to such negotiations.

ST. CROIX ISLAND NATIONAL MONUMENT, MAINE

The bill (S. 292) to authorize the establishment of the St. Croix Island National Monument, in the State of Maine, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I should like to have some explanation with respect to the cost of this project.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] does not appear to be in the Chamber.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I ask that the bill go over until Senators interested in the bill are in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY subsequently said: Mr. President I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 253, Senate bill 292, which was called while I was temporarily absent from the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, this is a bill introduced by the distinguished senior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. It is not only endorsed by him, as his sponsorship of the bill would indicate, but also by the junior Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH]. The bill undertakes to make a national monument of the Island of St. Croix in Maine to signalize the first French settlement in the United States. This settlement, by the way, was made in 1607. Only 7 acres are involved. It is of great interest to the people of Maine, and I feel that there is no real objection to the bill. I hope that it may be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purpose of establishing a Federal area of national historical importance for the benefit of the people of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept, for national monument purposes, on behalf of the United States, the donation of all non-Federal lands and interests in land situated on Saint Croix (Dochet) Island, located in the Saint Croix River, in the State of Maine. The Secretary is authorized to acquire, in such manner as he may consider to be in the public interest, not to exceed 50 acres of land or interests therein situated on the mainland, such property to be used for general administrative purposes and for a landing dock in order to provide a suitable approach and ready access to the island.

SEC. 2. Upon a determination by the Secretary of the Interior that sufficient land and interests in land situated on the island have been acquired by the United States for the establishment of a suitable national monument, such acquired property, and any Federal properties on the island that are not required for other public purposes, shall be established as the "Saint Croix Island National Monument." An order of the Secretary of the Interior, constituting notice of such determination, shall be published in the Federal Register. Following establishment of the national monument, other properties situated upon the island may become a part of the monument upon acquisition of title to such properties by the United States, and Federal properties situated upon the island, upon a determination by the agency administering such Federal properties that they are no longer required by that agency, may be transferred to the Secretary of the Interior by such agency to become a part of the national monument. Notice of the addition of any such properties to the monument shall be published in the Federal Register by the Secretary of the Interior. There shall be excluded from the national monument, for such time as the United States Coast Guard shall consider to be necessary, any portion of the island which is being used and which is required for the purposes of a Coast Guard light station.

SEC. 3. The national monument shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior, through the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535; 16 U. S. C. 1–4), as amended and supplemented, and the act of August 21, 1935 (49 Stat. 666; 16 U. S. C. 461–467).

SEC. 4. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I very much appreciate the interest of the Senator from Wyoming. I should like to point out that the correct date in 1604, instead of 1607. We antedated Jamestown by 3 years.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sorry I stated the wrong date; I was speaking from memory.

Mr. BREWSTER. I may say that practically no expense is involved, inasmuch as the family owning the island is going to give it to the Government, and also about 58 acres on the mainland. There may be a small piece of land on the mainland that will be involved, but it is very negligible. This matter has great historic significance, and I appreciate the consideration the Senate has given to it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I hold in my hand the report filed by the committee on this measure. It correctly states that the expedition landed on the island in the year 1604. The matter is of such historic interest, Mr. President, that I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report (No. 274) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 292) to authorize the establishment of the St. Croix Island National Monument, in the State of Maine, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The purpose of this bill is to authorize the establishment of the St. Croix Island National Monument, in the State of Maine, in commemoration of the first French settlement in America.

St. Croix Island embraces approximately 7 acres of land and is located in the St. Croix River, which forms the boundary between the State of Maine and New Brunswick, Canada. In 1604, prior to the settlement of Jamestown, Va., or Plymouth, Mass., an expedition led by the French explorer, De Monts, and his lieutenant, Champlain, landed on the island.

De Monts and Champlain, after exploring the Bay of Fundy, chose St. Croix Island as the site of the first French settlement in America (other than the ill-fated Fort Caroline), and lived there during the winter of 1604. They chose the island because it could be easily defended and because one end of it was clay, from which bricks could be made.

The expedition had a total complement of 120 men. During the winter spent on St.

Croix Island, approximately one-third of the company died.

Plans for the settlement were drawn by Champlain. It included a fort, storehouse, common meeting hall, kitchen and bake shop, and a blacksmith shop. Houses were built of timber brought from France. A well was dug and gardens planted. On the southwest part of the island, a chapel was erected and a cemetery was established. Cannon were mounted on both ends of the island.

After a very severe winter, the survivors sailed to Cape Cod and then established Fort Royal in Nova Scotia. Champlain later founded the city of Quebec in Canada.

The National Park Service, Department of the Interior, reports this area to be of major historical significance and believes that archeological work at the site of the settlement would produce valuable relics. Parts of the old foundations still remain.

The northern part of the island is owned by the Federal Government already, as it is the site of a Coast Guard lighthouse. S. 292 provides that the Coast Guard will retain jurisdiction over that area for so long as the lighthouse is in use.

The family owning the remainder of the island is willing to donate its land to the Government as soon as the necessary congressional authorization is granted. The bill also authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to acquire not more than 50 acres on the mainland for administrative purposes and for a landing dock in order to provide a suitable approach to the island. Most of this acreage will be donated by the same family controlling the privately owned land on St. Croix Island. The Government will buy only such land as is necessary for efficient administration.

The favorable report of the Interior Department to the chairman of the committee under date of March 18, 1949, is hereinbelow set forth in full and made a part of this report:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington 25, D. C., March 18, 1949.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
Chairman, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: Your committee has requested a report on S. 292, entitled "A bill to authorize the establishment of the St. Croix Island National Monument, in the State of Maine." This bill would authorize the acceptance by the Federal Government of the donation of all non-Federal land on St. Croix Island for establishment of the national monument. Also, it would authorize the acquisition of mainland properties for administrative purposes in connection with the national monument and for a landing dock in order to provide a suitable approach to the island.

I recommend that S. 292 be enacted.

St. Croix Island has a historical background of national significance. It is the site of the first French settlement in America, in 1604. Under the direction of the intrepid French leader, De Monts, and his even more famous lieutenant, Champlain, this island, situated in the St. Croix River, near the present boundary between Maine and New Brunswick, in Canada, became the scene, 3 years before Jamestown, of French effort to colonize North America. The establishment of the colony at St. Croix Island marked the first contact of that great French explorer, Champlain, with the American country. From St. Croix Island he conducted his first reconnaissance and the first French exploration along what later became the coast of the United States. His activity led to an attempt on the part of the French to settle on Mount Desert Island, near the present site of Bar Harbor, Maine, and Acadia National Park.

The National Park Service has made historical studies relating to the St. Croix Island proposal at intervals since 1932 and is of the opinion that the area is of major historical significance as the site of the first French settlement in America. Sufficient historical evidence exists to permit the effective interpretation of this phase of the history of New France. We believe that archeological work at the site of the settlement would yield more information and would bring to light artifacts and physical remains which would be of distinct scientific interest and museum value.

On the basis of the above historical reports and studies, the Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings, and Monuments, at its nineteenth meeting on April 28-30, 1948, reaffirmed its previous action in recognizing St. Croix Island as of national significance because of its importance in the history of early French colonization in North America.

As we understand that your committee desires an immediate report on this bill, this report has not been submitted to the Bureau of the Budget. Consequently, I am unable to advise you as to the relation of this proposed legislation to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

OSCAR L. CHAPMAN,
Acting Secretary of the Interior.

REHABILITATION OF CERTAIN WORKS OF FORT SUMNER IRRIGATION DISTRICT, NEW MEXICO

The bill (S. 276) to authorize a project for the rehabilitation of certain works of the Fort Sumner irrigation district in New Mexico, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am suffering from some embarrassment in regard to this matter. In the last Congress I objected to this bill on the ground that there should be a pact between New Mexico and Texas. The pact has been arranged, and there are now before the committee bills providing for the ratification of the pact.

I am not objecting to the bill at this time, because I do not wish to object; but at the same time I should prefer that the matter go over for a little while, until this pact can be ratified. Then this matter will come under the operation of a pact, and I think we shall have no difficulty at all.

I am not hostile to the idea. I have spoken to the junior Senator from New Mexico about it, and I hope the senior Senator from New Mexico will go along with us, and allow the bill to go over until the next call of the calendar.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, there is no Member of the Senate to whose requests I would more readily accede than those of the senior Senator from Texas. But more than that is involved in this particular question.

The senior Senator from Texas says we have agreed on the pact, and that as soon as the pact is ratified, this matter can be proceeded with. That is perfectly fine; but by the same token, if he trusts us to go along with the pact, why does he not trust us now, and why is he unwilling to go along now with the junior Senator from New Mexico in this matter?

The only reason why the junior Senator from New Mexico appears in this connection is because he happened to belong to the particular committee concerned. But former Senator Hatch, who preceded the present junior Senator from New Mexico, had a bill similar to this passed during the last session. The senior Senator from New Mexico has been working on this bill for years. We have been cooperating with the senior Senator from Texas on everything he wanted in this particular bill. I cannot see that the pact will suffer any if we pass the bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I wonder whether we may have an explanation of one feature of the bill. As I understand the bill, it requires certain reimbursements to be made to the Federal Government, by the residents of the irrigation district. The committee report does not indicate at all when the payments are to be made. I should like the Senate to have some explanation as to the time over which the reimbursements are to be made.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I shall be glad to inform the Senator in regard to the workings of the reclamation laws in the West. At times it is very difficult to inform Senators from the Eastern States as to how the affairs of the irrigation districts are conducted.

Every penny the Government spends on these projects is paid by the farmers who receive the benefits of the water which is used for irrigation purposes.

The general rule is that the Reclamation Service makes a contract with the local district, under the reclamation laws. The Government advances the money, and then makes a contract, to be in effect for a certain number of years. The farmers are required to pay so much a year into the Federal Treasury.

In this particular instance, the people of the Fort Sumner irrigation district will in due time, and according to what the Bureau of Reclamation, under the Interior Department, says shall be the contract, make the payments to the Federal Treasury. The Government will not lose one penny in this particular case.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am very reluctant to object to this bill. It was before the Senate last year. Many people in my State were insisting that I object and hold it up, on the ground that the interstate compact had not been concluded. The compact has now been agreed to between the two States, and we hope it will solve all our difficulties. It is here in the Senate, ready for ratification.

While I must do so reluctantly, nevertheless I must observe the wishes of my people. The people in the area affected, in Texas, are insistent that the bill not be passed until the compact is ratified. So, although I shall not make objection

Croix Island, approximately one-third of the company died.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 34) to investigate contracts with railroads for carrying United States mails, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service with amendments, on page 1, in line 3, after the words "respect to", to strike out "contracts" and insert "rates"; and in line 4, after the word "railroads", to insert "air lines and steamship lines", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service is authorized and directed (1) to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to rates with railroads, air lines, and steamship lines, for carrying United States mail with a view to ascertaining whether, in the light of changes in the volume of mail carried, any change in the rates charged for such service is necessary or advisable, and (2) to report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations for necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended so as to correspond to the amendments.

The title was amended so as to read: "Resolution to investigate rates with railroads, air lines, and steamship lines for carrying United States mails."

REHABILITATION OF CERTAIN WORKS OF FORT SUMNER IRRIGATION DISTRICT, NEW MEXICO

The bill (S. 276) to authorize a project for the rehabilitation of certain works of the Fort Sumner irrigation district in New Mexico, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am suffering from some embarrassment in regard to this matter. In the last Congress I objected to this bill on the ground that there should be a pact between New Mexico and Texas. The pact has been arranged, and there are now before the committee bills providing for the ratification of the pact.

I am not objecting to the bill at this time, because I do not wish to object; but at the same time I should prefer that the matter go over for a little while, until this pact can be ratified. Then this matter will come under the operation of a pact, and I think we shall have no difficulty at all.

I am not hostile to the idea. I have spoken to the junior Senator from New Mexico about it, and I hope the senior Senator from New Mexico will go along with us, and allow the bill to go over until the next call of the calendar.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, there is no Member of the Senate to whose requests I would more readily accede than those of the senior Senator from Texas. But more than that is involved in this particular question.

The senior Senator from Texas says we have agreed on the pact, and that as soon as the pact is ratified, this matter can be proceeded with. That is perfectly fine; but by the same token, if he trusts us to go along with the pact, why does he not trust us now, and why is he unwilling to go along now with the junior Senator from New Mexico in this matter?

The only reason why the junior Senator from New Mexico appears in this connection is because he happened to belong to the particular committee concerned. But former Senator Hatch, who preceded the present junior Senator from New Mexico, had a bill similar to this passed during the last session. The senior Senator from New Mexico has been working on this bill for years. We have been cooperating with the senior Senator from Texas on everything he wanted in this particular bill. I cannot see that the pact will suffer any if we pass the bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I wonder whether we may have an explanation of one feature of the bill. As I understand the bill, it requires certain reimbursements to be made to the Federal Government, by the residents of the irrigation district. The committee report does not indicate at all when the payments are to be made. I should like the Senate to have some explanation as to the time over which the reimbursements are to be made.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I shall be glad to inform the Senator in regard to the workings of the reclamation laws in the West. At times it is very difficult to inform Senators from the Eastern States as to how the affairs of the irrigation districts are conducted.

Every penny the Government spends on these projects is paid by the farmers who receive the benefits of the water which is used for irrigation purposes.

The general rule is that the Reclamation Service makes a contract with the local district, under the reclamation laws. The Government advances the money, and then makes a contract, to be in effect for a certain number of years. The farmers are required to pay so much a year into the Federal Treasury.

In this particular instance, the people of the Fort Sumner irrigation district will in due time, and according to what the Bureau of Reclamation, under the Interior Department, says shall be the contract, make the payments to the Federal Treasury. The Government will not lose one penny in this particular case.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am very reluctant to object to this bill. It was before the Senate last year. Many people in my State were insisting that I object and hold it up, on the ground that the interstate compact had not been concluded. The compact has now been agreed to between the two States, and we hope it will solve all our difficulties. It is here in the Senate, ready for ratification.

While I must do so reluctantly, nevertheless I must observe the wishes of my people. The people in the area affected, in Texas, are insistent that the bill not be passed until the compact is ratified. So, although I shall not make objection gladly, nevertheless I am compelled to do so through a sense of duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, let me point out that there are other Senators who have a sense of duty, not only to their own States, but even to neighboring States. No one in the State of New Mexico has cooperated more heartily with Texas in protecting its own rights than has the senior Senator from New Mexico. I know we would be better off, so far as this little two-by-four irrigation district, which does not amount to a million dollars, is concerned, if we had not thought that we should have cooperated with the senior Senator from Texas when he was trying to get the Rio Grande treaty with Mexico adopted. That treaty meant millions and millions of dollars to the State of Texas. All the water which Texas gets in the lower irrigation district now comes from the Republic of Mexico. We were anxious to cooperate with the senior Senator from Texas, notwithstanding in that particular instance we could have protected our two-by-four project in New Mexico, a project irrigating 600,000 acres of land belonging to hard-working Christian people. We could have told the Senator from Texas that in that matter we would do what he is doing in regard to this matter, and could have said, "We will wait until these pacts are signed, and then we will arrange these things"; but we did not do so.

I ask the Senator in all sincerity if he does agree that we cooperated in that matter? New Mexico has agreed to that pact. The senior Senator from New Mexico is not going to object to the pact; he wishes this body to ratify it; and I know that the junior Senator from New Mexico will go along with what New Mexico has done.

I could tell the senior Senator from Texas how we have cooperated in other ways. The senior Senator from Texas was not a member of the Appropriations Committee when Representative FISHER, of Texas, wanted $3,000,000 for protection at San Angelo, and it was not the senior Senator from Texas and the junior Senator from Texas who obtained it, but it was the senior Senator from New Mexico. When the Green River projects came before the committee the other day, it was not anyone from Texas who obtained their approval.

What I am trying to say is that we of New Mexico want to work with Texas. They are our neighbors. They are fine people, and they deserve consideration. But just the same, let us strictly understand that cooperation must not be all on one side. If the senior Senator from Texas now is unwilling to trust that we will go along with what New Mexico has signed, and objects to the bill—well I do not know whether I would be justified in not waiting until my constituents insist that I do my duty. I want to go along, and I give my word of honor that both Senators from New Mexico will vote to ratify the interstate compact.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it is with deep regret that I note from his expressions the feelings of the senior Senator from New Mexico. I want to assure him we are entirely grateful for any help coming from the Senators from New Mexico with regard to these matters. We are neighbors. We want to get along well together, and we have no disposition to injure New Mexico in any wise.

I suggest to the Senater, though, and to the Senate, that the House of Representatives today reported its approval of the compact between New Mexico and Texas, on this subject. The Department's report on it to the Senate committee is now due, and I feel sure that within a single week we shall get the approval of the committee. There is no reason why the compact should not be ratified, and I am sure it will be ratified. But it is with assurances on my part of regret that I note any feeling on the part of the Senator from New Mexico that Texas interests have not been cooperative. With the utmost sincerity, I hope the Senator from New Mexico will not entertain any feelings of hostility because of my action; but I must object, and do object.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I do not entertain any feelings of hostility. All I entertain is an impression of the unconscious arrogance of conscious power.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

MRS. HATTIE TRAUX

The resolution (S. Res. 112) for the relief of Mrs. Hattie Traux was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. With reference to this resolution, I should like to ask what is the distinction between Senate bill 411 and other bills of similar character which prompted the committee, by Senate Resolution 112, to refer this relief bill to the Court of Claims?

Mr. McCARRAN. Is the Senator referring to the Senate Resolution 112?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. The committee concluded to send this bill to the Court of Claims because it was thought the Court of Claims had more jurisdiction to go into the matter at length, and better facilities for doing so.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. May I ask the Senator, on what grounds?

Mr. McCARRAN. The matter is controversial. The facts, as furnished us, are not at all decisive. It would take a long time to determine the facts, and we are not set up as a court to try the issues. However, we have a Court of Claims which is established for that purpose and which has the right to call witnesses before it and to determine the facts. Therefore, the committee thought it should go to that court.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Is that by reason of the special circumstances involved?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 411) entitled "For the relief of Mrs. Hattie Traux" now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, is hereby referred to the Court of Claims; and the court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of sections 1492 and 2509 of title 28 of the United States Code and report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, giving such findings of fact and conclusions thereon as shall be sufficient to inform the Congress of the nature and character of the demand as a claim, legal or equitable, against the United States, and the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimant.

GEORGE KRINOPOLIS

The bill (S. 623) for the relief of George Krinopolis was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George Krinopolis, of Waltham, Mass., the sum of $332.34, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for compensation for accrued leave remaining to his credit at the date of his relief from active duty as a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps Reserve.

HAYWARD O. BRANDON

The bill (S. 1266) for the relief of Hayward O. Brandon was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Hayward O. Brandon, of Philippi, W. Va., the sum of $259. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Hayward O. Brandon against the United States for wages for overtime work performed during 1941 as an employee of the Post Office Department: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

THOMAS O. TROTH

The bill (H. R. 1467) for the relief of Thomas O. Troth was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ANNA SMOLOWITZ AND MRS. SYLVIA D'ARPE

The bill (H. R. 1489) for the relief of James I. Matthews was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD L. BARRERAS

The bill (H. R. 1983) for the relief of Edward L. Barreras was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIE E. WRIGHT

The bill (H. R. 2231) for the relief of Marie E. Wright was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I note from the committee report that the Department of the Army recommended that this claimant be awarded not to exceed $2,600. The bill awards to the claimant in excess of $4,500. I should like to know why the increase in the award above the amount recommended.

Mr. McCARRAN. The House allowed the sum of $4,528. The committee, in considering the facts, did not go along with the report of the Department, but thought the disfigurement suffered warranted a greater amount, and therefore went along with the amount allowed by the House.

As a matter of fact, I may say, if I were to express my personal opinion, I think the award should have been greater.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. In view of the Senator's explanation, I withhold my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 2231) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA ARMSTRONG

The bill (H. R. 2710) for the relief of Emma Armstrong was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. BENJAMIN BETTS

The bill (H. R. 2935) for the relief of Mrs. Benjamin Betts was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF PERSONNEL OF THE UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The bill (S. 1152) for the relief of certain officers and employees of the Office of United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands who suffered losses of personal property by reason of war conditions was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator if this is one of a series of bills to be presented covering this type of claim? Will other bills of this nature be filed?

Mr. McCARRAN. We have, I think, passed three bills of similar nature in previous Congresses. There are some 23 individuals involved. The purpose of the proposed legislation is to provide for the payment of a sum of money totaling $40,074.95, to a number of individuals formerly stationed in Manila as employees in the Office of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, for reimbursement for the loss of personal property as a result of war conditions.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I may say that I am heartily in favor of reimbursement, but I was wondering whether this bill is one of a series likely to come before the Senate.

Mr. McCARRAN. The best advice I can give is that this may be the last of its kind. I am not certain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, on page 1, beginning in line 3, to strike out "That there is authorized to be appropriated and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums of money for payment" and to insert "That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums of money."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums of money to the following-named officers and employees of the Office of United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, which sums represent the value of reasonable and necessary personal property lost by them, while in the course of their respective duties, as a result of war conditions:

SEC. 4. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

FLOYD OLES AND HELEN LOUISE OLES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 113) for the relief of Floyd Oles and Helen Louise Oles, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Helen Louise Oles."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I had an impression that the Senate passed a bill providing that claims of this kind should be handled by the courts. May I inquire of the Senator from Nevada whether the person injured has an alternative?

Mr. MCCARRAN. This matter developed prior to the passage of the Tort Claims Act.

MRS. GERTRUDE WESTWAY, LEGAL GUARDIAN FOR BOBBIE NILES JOHNSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 322) for the relief of Mrs. Gertrude Westway, legal guardian for Bobbie Niles Johnson, a minor, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 1, line 5, after the name "Gertrude", to strike out "Westway" and insert "Westaway"; in line 6, after the word "for", to strike out "Bobbie" and insert "Bobby"; in line 8, after the word "of" where it first occurs, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,000"; and in line 10, after the word "by", to strike out "Bobbie" and insert "Bobby", so as to make the bill read:

The amendments were agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Mrs. Gertrude H. Westaway, legal guardian of Bobby Niles Johnson, a minor."

DETENTION, CARE, AND TREATMENT OF PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 934) to provide for the detention, care, and treatment of persons of unsound mind in certain Federal reservations in Virginia and Maryland, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 3, line 12, after the word "and", to insert "except as provided in section 3 hereof"; at the top of page 4, to insert "Such hearing shall be conducted at St. Elizabeths Hospital if the superintendent thereof shall certify that in his opinion it would be prejudicial to the health of the patient or unsafe to produce the patient at a hearing elsewhere."; in line 4, after the word "If", to insert "after any hearing at a place other than St. Elizabeths Hospital"; in line 6, after the word "commits" to strike out "such" and insert "a"; after line 10, to insert "Sec. 3. Any person in any of the places described in section 1 hereof may, upon his written application, be admitted for observation and diagnosis to St. Elizabeths Hospital in the discretion of the Superintendent thereof for a period not exceeding 30 days. Any such person expressing a desire for release from St. Elizabeths Hospital shall be released within 72 hours thereafter, unless proceedings for his adjudication as a person of unsound mind shall have been instituted as provided for in section 5 hereof."; in line 20, to change the section number from "3" to "4"; on page 5, line 1, to change the section number from "4" to "5"; in line 5, after the word "mind", to strike out "shall report his findings to the Federal Security Administrator, who"; in line 9, after the word "person", to insert "or any person admitted to the hospital pursuant to section 3 hereof"; in line 23, to change the section number from "5" to "6"; on page 6, line 5, to change the section number from "6" to "7"; in line 19, to change the section number from "7" to "8", and in line 22, after the word "act", to insert "or admitted to the hospital pursuant to section 3 hereof", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted etc., That any United States commissioner specially designated for that purpose by the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia or by the United States District Court for the District of Maryland shall have jurisdiction and authority to commit to St. Elizabeths Hospital in the District of Columbia, for observation and diagnosis, any person found in any place over which the United States has exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction in Arlington County, Fairfax County, or the city of Alexandria, in the State of Virginia, or in Montgomery County, or in Prince Georges County, in the State of Maryland, who is alleged, and is believed by the commissioner, to be of unsound mind. Any United States commissioner specially designated for that purpose by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall have like jurisdiction and authority in the case of any person temporarily detained in St. Elizabeths Hospital, pursuant to section 2 hereof. Any such commitment shall be for a period not exceeding 30 days and may be made only after a hearing before the commissioner upon the testimony of at least two witnesses and, in addition, upon the testimony or certificate of two physicians, at least one of whom is skilled in the treatment and diagnosis of nervous and mental disorders, who shall testify or certify in writing that they have examined the said person alleged to be of unsound mind and believe said person to be of unsound mind and not fit to remain at liberty and go unrestrained, and that such person should be in custody in a hospital for the treatment of mental or nervous disorders for his own safety and welfare and for the preservation of the peace and good order. The agency of the United States in control of the place where such person is apprehended is authorized to employ physicians for the aforesaid purpose and to pay compensation for their services and to pay expenses of witnesses in such proceedings out of funds available therefor. Physicians who are officers or employees of the United States or who are members of the armed forces of the United States are hereby authorized to render such services without additional compensation.

SEC. 2. Any officer or employee of the United States authorized to make arrests, and any guard or watchman employed by the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to apprehend and detain any person whom he believes to be of unsound mind and found in any of the aforesaid places, and except as provided in section 3 hereof, to bring such person for a hearing before a United States commissioner for the district where such person was apprehended and designated as provided in section 1 hereof. If an immediate hearing before a commissioner cannot be had, such officer or employee is authorized and empowered to take such person to St. Elizabeths Hospital and the Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital is authorized to detain such person pending a hearing before a United States commissioner for the District of Columbia, designated as provided in section 1 hereof, for a period not exceeding 72 hours. Such commissioner shall hold a hearing as promptly as practicable after the apprehension of such person and in any event not later than 72 hours thereafter. Such hearing shall be conducted at St. Elizabeths Hospital if the Superintendent thereof shall certify that in his opinion it would be prejudicial to the health of the patient or unsafe to produce the patient at a hearing elsewhere. If, after any hearing at a place other than St. Elizabeths Hospital, the commissioner commits a person to St. Elizabeths Hospital, any officer, employee, guard or watchman above mentioned is authorized to transport such person to St. Elizabeths Hospital in accordance with the order of the commissioner.

SEC. 3. Any person in any of the places described in section 1 hereof may, upon his written application, be admitted for observation and diagnosis to St. Elizabeths Hospital in the discretion of the Superintendent thereof for a period not exceeding 30 days. Any such person expressing a desire for release from St. Elizabeths Hospital shall be released within 72 hours thereafter, unless proceedings for his adjudication as a person of unsound mind shall have been instituted as provided for in section 5 hereof.

SEC. 4. The Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital is hereby authorized and directed to receive for observation and diagnosis any person apprehended or committed as provided in sections 1 and 2 hereof for the periods therein prescribed, unless such person is sooner discharged or returned to his home or to the State of his residence.

SEC. 5. The Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital shall promptly examine any person committed as provided in sections 1 and 2 of this act and (a) if found to be of sound mind, shall forthwith discharge said person, or (b) if found to be of unsound mind, shall return such person to the State of his residence or to his relatives, if practicable. Proceedings for the adjudication of such person, or of any person admitted to the hospital pursuant to section 3 hereof, as a person of unsound mind and for the appointment of a committee of his person or property may be instituted in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia by the Federal Security Administrator or by any party interested. The laws of the District of Columbia shall be applicable to such proceedings. Nothing in this act shall be construed as imposing upon the District of Columbia the expense of care and treatment of any person apprehended, detained, or committed under this act unless such person be a resident of the District of Columbia as defined in section 8 of the act entitled "An act to provide for insanity proceedings in the District of Columbia," approved August 9, 1939.

SEC. 6. Any person belonging to the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard arrested, apprehended, detained, or committed under the provisions of this act shall, upon the request of the head of the department having jurisdiction over the service to which the individual belongs, be transferred forthwith to the custody of such department.

SEC. 7. If any person adjudicated to be of unsound mind under the provisions of this act is entitled to care and treatment in a Veterans' Administration facility, he may be committed by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia to the custody of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for placement in an available facility or may be transferred by the Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital to any such facility: Provided, That nothing in this act shall limit, restrict, or deprive the courts of any State or the District of Columbia of jurisdiction to commit to the Veterans' Administration any insane person entitled to care and treatment by the Veterans' Administration in accordance with the laws so made and provided by such States or the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. The Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital is authorized to arrange for and pay the expenses of the transfer of any person committed to his custody pursuant to the provisions of this act or admitted to the hospital pursuant to section 3 hereof, to his relatives or to a hospital in the State of his residence and in connection with such transfer is authorized to pay the transportation and expenses of attendants necessary to insure safe travel.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, this bill deals with persons of unsound mind, and because it does, it is a rather serious matter. I should like to note that there is no provision in the bill for notification of relatives, which is customary in such cases. It does not require that testimony at the hearing be given by witnesses under oath. It further does not spell out what testimony is to be given by the witnesses, and, last of all, I think that where it requires a doctor's certification, it should provide for an affidavit by the doctor. In order to correct the bill with respect to those criticisms, I should like to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 12, it is proposed, after the word "testimony" and before the word "of", to insert "under oath."

On page 2, line 12, after the word "witnesses", insert "who shall testify as to their belief that the said person is of unsound mind."

On page 2, line 13, after the word "testimony" and before the word "or", insert "under oath."

On page 2, line 13, strike out the word "certificate" and substitute the word "affidavit."

On page 2, line 22, after the period following the word "order", insert:

It shall be the duty of the head of the agency of the United States in control of the place where such person is apprehended to forthwith notify the husband or wife or some near relative or friend of the person so apprehended, whose address may be known to said agency head or whose address can, by reasonable inquiry, be ascertained by him: Provided further, In case of any person described in section 5, the agency head shall notify the head of the department having jurisdiction over the service to which the individual belongs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendments en bloc?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. No.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, may I have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like an explanation, also, as to whether the amendments offered by the Senator from New Jersey are amendments to the committee amendments or amendments to the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. They are amendments to the bill itself. I had not seen the committee amendments.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, so far as the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is concerned, I want to say that this bill was before the committee on two different occasions. It was very carefully considered and then referred to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Senator who now occupies the chair. It was then reported favorably with these amendments. So far as I am personally concerned, I would accept the amendments offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing en bloc to the amendments offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON].

The amendments were agreed to en bloc.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, there is one question I should like to have answered. I have not had an opportunity to read the bill. I see that it involves the incarceration of persons adjudged to be of unsound mind. The question I should like to ask is, Does it provide for the incarceration of such persons without a jury trial? What are the prerequisites to locking up such persons? I may say in that connection that there was a bill before the Committee on the District of Columbia which, I believe, was substantially along the same line, and I objected to it very strenuously because I believe that under no circumstances should anyone be adjudged of unsound mind or be locked up without having the right to appear before a jury and to prove that he or she is of sound mind.

For that reason, Mr. President, while I do not want to object to the bill, I should like to ask that it be placed at the foot of the calendar, and I should like to discuss the matter with the author of the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have no objection to its being placed at the foot of the calendar. The bill was asked for by authorities of St. Elizabeths Hospital. All it does is to afford a place of detention for persons coming into the District who are affected mentally. They have to be taken care of. Every safeguard the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on the District of Columbia could think of has been thrown around persons of that kind. The bill affords a place of detention for a very short period of time, 30 days, for persons who thereafter may have to be sent to their respective States for permanent detention or for continued detention.

Mr. McCARTHY. Do I correctly understand it provides only for detention a maximum of 30 days?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CRIMES AND CRIMINAL PROCEDURE AND THE JUDICIARY AND JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3762) to amend title 18, entitled "Crimes and Criminal Procedure," and title 28, entitled "Judiciary and Judicial Procedure," of the United States Code, and for other purposes, which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, in connection with this bill I should like to explain that it merely undertakes to correct minor typographical and clerical errors in the codification bill which was passed by the Eightieth Congress. There are on the desk of the clerk numerous amendments adopted by the committee, and some made subsequent to the reporting of the bill, which I suggest be considered en bloc.

I might say that the Committee on the Judiciary is unanimous in connection with all phases of this matter. The changes which have been suggested are the result of very careful screening by a committee of judges of the Federal courts appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States. As I said, they merely pick up a number of minor errors and inaccuracies, and remove ambiguities. I therefore ask that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGRATH in the chair). Is there objection to considering the committee amendments en bloc? The Chair hears none, and the amendments will be agreed to en bloc.

The amendments of the committee agreed to en bloc are, on page 14, line 17, after the word "communities", to strike out "nor does this section apply to such lands" and insert "or rights-of-way through Indian reservations, and this section does not apply to such lands or rights-of-way."

On page 15, line 1, after the word "through", to strike out "such lands" and insert "Indian Reservations."

On page 17, after the word "or", to strike out "deposit" and insert "delivery."

On page 23, line 1, after the word "may", to insert "for cause."

On page 24, line 24, after "United States", to strike out "Circuit."

On page 29, line 21, after the word "Guard", to insert "and (8) by striking out immediate after 'Director of the Census' the words 'Chief Forester, National Park Service, Department of the Interior" and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'Chief of Forest Service, Department of Agriculture.'"

On page 31, after line 12, to insert:

SEC. 72a. The analysis of chapter 41 of title 28, United States Code, immediately preceding section 601 of such title, is amended by striking out the item "609 courts, appointive power unaffected" and inserting in lieu thereof, the following: "609 courts' appointive power unaffected."

On page 31, in line 24, after the word "of", to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "commissioner"; on page 32, after line 22, to insert:

SEC. 78. (a) The analysis of chapter 57 of title 28, United States Code, immediately preceding section 951 of such title is amended by striking out the item "955. Practice of law by clerks restricted" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "955. Practice of law restricted."

On page 33, after line 7, to strike out:

SEC. 80. (a) Subdivision (1) of subsection (a) of section 1346 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out the semicolon immediately following the words "internal revenue laws", and by inserting a comma immediately after "$10,000."

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 80. (a) Subdivision (1) of subsection (a) of section 1346 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out the semicolon immediately following the words "internal-revenue laws", and by inserting in lieu thereof a comma and immediately following such comma the words and characters as follows: "(i) if the claim does not exceed $10,000 or (ii)."

On page 33, after line 22, to insert:

(c) Section 1351 of title 28, United States Code, exclusive of the catch line, is amended to read as follows: "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction, exclusive of the courts of the States, of all actions and proceedings against consuls or vice consuls of foreign states."

On page 34, after line 2, to strike out:

SEC. 81. Subsection (a) of section 1406 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out the word "shall", and inserting in lieu thereof the words "may, in the interest of justice."

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 81. Subsection (a) of section 1406 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out the word "shall" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "shall dismiss, or if it be in the interest of justice."

On page 37, line 12, after the section number, to insert "(a)"; at the top of page 38, insert a new subsection, as follows:

(b) Paragraph No. (2) of section 1544 of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) the Commissioner of Patents as to trade-mark applications and proceedings as provided in section 1071 of title 15."

On page 38, after line 14, to insert:

SEC. 92. (a) The analysis of chapter 115 of title 28, United States Code, immediately preceding section 1731, is amended by striking out the item "1745. Printed copies of patent specifications and drawings." and by renumbering item 1746 as "1745."

On page 38, after line 23, to insert:

(c) The first paragraph of section 1744 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out after "relating to" the words "registered trade-marks, labels, or prints," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "patents,", and by inserting after "Commissioner of Patents," the words "or by another officer of the Patent Office authorized to do so by the Commissioner."

(d) Section 1745 of title 28, United States Code, is repealed.

(e) Section 1746 of title 28, United States Code, is renumbered "1745."

And on page 46, line 9, after the word "title," to insert "and by inserting after 'instituting' and before 'any proceedings' the words 'or prosecuting.' "

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, there are other amendments I desire to offer, which are merely clarifying changes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments offered by the Senator from Maryland will be considered and agreed to en bloc.

The amendments agreed to en bloc are, on page 6, line 25, after the name "United States", to insert "or in the Canal Zone."

On page 15, line 1, in the committee amendment, after the word "Indian", to strike out "Reservations" and insert "reservations."

On page 27, line 20, after the word "subsection", to strike out "(c)" and insert "(d)."

On page 28, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 64a. The first paragraph of section 91 of title 28 of the United States Code, entitled "Judiciary and Judicial Procedure", is amended by striking out at the end thereof the words "and Jarvis Island" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Jarvis Island, Canton Island, and Enderbury Island: Provided, That the inclusion of Canton and Enderbury Islands in such judicial district shall in no way be construed to be prejudicial to the claims of the United Kingdom to said islands in accordance with the agreement of April 6, 1939, between the Governments of the United States and of the United Kingdom to set up a regime for their use in common."

On page 31, line 17, in the committee amendment, after "609", to strike out the word "courts' " and insert a period and the word "Courts'."

On page 38, line 1, in the committee amendment, after the word "section", to strike out "1544" and insert "1542."

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, do the amendments correct the errors of duplication which exist in the bill?

Mr. O'CONOR. Yes; in many respects they pick up errors which, unfortunately, could not have been reached when the legislation was being passed simultaneously with the enactment of the revision law in the Eightieth Congress. All that is sought is to bring them in conformity with the general codification of titles 18 and 28. In no sense is there any enactment of substantive law, but merely correction of errors, misspellings, and inaccuracies in revision.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I note on page 17, lines 10 to 19, that there is a duplication of the language of Senate bill 1043, passed by the Senate on April 11. I wonder if the bill should not be further amended.

Mr. O'CONOR. Will the Senator give me that reference again?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Page 17, lines 10 to 19. There is a duplication of language in Senate bill 1043, passed on April 11. It could be readily corrected by striking out lines 10 through 19.

Mr. O'CONOR. I might say that the Senator is correct in stating that a similar measure was passed. However, the committee thought it would be preferable to include this language in the pending bill, so that in the event the other measure was not finally adopted we would be safeguarded. No difficulty will be encountered by having this provision included in the pending bill also.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I withdraw any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ORGANIZATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1704) to strengthen and improve the organization and administration of the Department of State, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be in the Department of State, in addition to the Secretary of State, an Under Secretary of State and ten Assistant Secretaries of State. The Secretary of State may designate two assistant secretaries to serve as deputy under secretaries.

SEC. 2. The officers referred to in section 1 of this act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Counselor of the Department of State and the legal advisor, who are required to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall rank equally with the Assistant Secretaries of State. Officers enumerated in section 1 holding office at the time the provisions of this act become effective shall not be required to be reappointed by reason of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of State, or such person or persons designated by him, notwithstanding the provisions of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 999) or any other law, except where authority is vested in the President of the United States, shall, under the authority of the President, administer, coordinate, and direct the Foreign Service of the United States. Any provisions in the Foreign Service Act of 1946, or in any other law, vesting authority in the "Assistant Secretary of State for Administration," the "Assistant Secretary of State in charge of the Administration of the Department," the "Director General," the "Board of Examiners for the Foreign Service," or any other reference with respect thereto, are hereby amended to vest such authority in the Secretary of State.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of State may promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the functions now or hereafter vested in the Secretary of State or the Department of State, and he may delegate authority to perform any of such functions to officers and employees under his direction and supervision.

SEC. 5. The following statutes or parts of statutes are hereby repealed:

Section 200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended and amplified by the acts authorizing the establishment of additional Assistant Secretaries of State, including section 22 of the act of May 24, 1924 (ch. 182, and the act of December 8, 1944, R. S. 200; 43 Stat. 146; 58 Stat. 798; 5 U. S. C. 152, as amended by Public Law 767, Eightieth Congress).

Section 202 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1000) and any other reference in such act to the "Deputy Director General."

Section 1041 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1032).

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Texas if this measure follows the suggestion of the Hoover Commission report and if in fact it does change the suggestion in that report? I think the Hoover Commission report, on page 41, in the letter of transmittal to the Congress on the 21st of February this year, suggested "The addition of two Deputy Under Secretaries, the one to act in matters of substance, and the other, as a 'general manager,' to administer the Department and the overseas service." It did not recommend that these appointees be selected from the level of Assistant Secretaries.

The pending bill in my judgment seems to be a departure from the recommendation, and I should like to have the distinguished Senator from Texas explain that feature of the bill, if he will.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as the Senator knows, the bill adds two additional Secretaries of State. It was felt by the committee and by the Secretary of State that in preference to calling them "Under Secretaries," the Secretary of State should have authority to assign them to duties which ordinarily would be performed by Under Secretaries of State, and more closely coordinate the centralized authority in the Secretary of State. That is the reason for the committee action.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. On page 1, beginning in line 10, the bill provides:

> The Counselor of the Department of State and the Legal Adviser, who are required to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall rank equally with the Assistant Secretaries of State.

The Hoover Commission on page 44 recommended the abolishment of these posts. The retention of these posts by the pending bill makes me wonder what the Senator's suggestion is with reference to that, as it deviates from the Hoover Commission report.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations did not recognize that the recommendations of the Hoover Commission in every respect should be binding on the committee. If the Senator is contending that we did not simply incorporate the Hoover Commission report, he is correct.

The Senator was asking particularly about line 11 on page 2, was he?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I referred to the language beginning in line 10 on page 1 and running over on to page 2, where the bill retains the counselor of the Department of State. I noticed that was a considerable departure from the recommendations of the Hoover Commission report. I was wondering if the Senator had some explanation. I understand him to say that the committee does not feel it is bound, but since we are considering the Hoover Commission report, I was wondering if the Senator had some suggestion to offer with reference to that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in the first place, the purpose of the bill is to centralize more nearly all the authority in the organization in the Secretary of State. If the Senator will observe on page 1, he will see that it is provided that "The Secretary of State may designate two Assistant Secretaries to serve as Deputy Under Secretaries." That covers the same thing the Senator had in mind about the two Under Secretaries.

Under the present law many of these subordinates in the Department have by law certain functions which are vested in them. That was not regarded as a wholesome provision, because all the authority should be under the general direction of the Secretary of State. So in section 2 it is provided:

> The officers referred to in section 1 of this act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The counselor of the Department of State and the legal adviser, who are required to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall rank equally with the Assistant Secretaries of State.

If that can conflict with the Hoover Commission recommendation, I shall have to adhere to the committee's recommendation, because I think it is a very sound provision. It makes the officers appointive by the President, and to be confirmed by the Senate, which gives every Senator a chance to object to their qualifications or their suitability. It merely provides that the counselor, who heretofore has been a very high ranking officer, shall have equal rank with the Assistant Secretaries of State. It provides that the Secretary may designate two Assistant Secretaries, who shall serve as Assistant Under Secretaries.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I was especially interested in this departure, because the present Secretary of State was a member, indeed a very influential member, of the Hoover Commission, which has made these recommendations and suggestions. I was naturally curious to know why this departure, and if the committee had considered that question, since the present Secretary of State was a member of the Hoover Commission, which made the suggestions.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know what was said in the Hoover Commission report, or what the Secretary of State may have said privately, but this bill has his approval, both as to the principle of unifying and consolidating the authority in the Secretary, and taking away from these subordinate officials statutory duties which we feel should be concentrated in the directing authority of the State Department.
